Edward To Go To France If He Decides To Abdicate

KING TELLS CABINET DETERMINED TO WED

Cancels Official Engagements —Rothermere Swings to Sovereign.

PARIS. (UP). King Edward VIII telephoned from England to Herman L Rogers at Cannes, advising him that Mrs. Wallis Simpson is arriving there Saturday night and announcing that if he should decide to abdicate, he will go directly to Cannes.

Mrs. Simpson, hurrying southward thru France, telephoned Rogers and told him she would arrive at 11 p. m.

An English secret service operative arrived at Cannes by airplane. The French government assigned two secret service men to guard the Rogers villa.

LONDON. (P). King Edward told his distressed, irate cabinet he is determined to marry Wallis Simpson—and then formally cancelled all his official engagements "for the present." His supporters thought it meant he merely wanted to have his hands free to deal with the present constitutional crisis—Prime Minister Baldwin's ultimatum that he and Mrs. Simpson must not wed.

The king, it was learned from a high source, has not decided to abdicate—he has decided nothing except that he will marry his American friend.

Baldwin called on the king again Saturday evening.

Late Saturday in what was interpreted as a flat warning to the government and a powerful swing to the side of the sovereign, Lord Rothermere said in the Evening News: "You cannot smuggle the greatest living Englishman off the throne of England during the week end." The publisher urged "time" for the solution of the crisis.

King Said Cheerful.

At Fort Belvedere the king was described as "cheerful and in the best of health" by a friend who talked to him shortly before 4 p. m.

(Reports from Vienne, France, said Mrs Simpson, who hastened from England Thursday night, had telephoned Buckingham palace. Presumably the palace switchboard connected the call with Belvedere).

The archbishop of Westminster, Dr. Arthur Hinsley, issued a statement asking for special prayers for the king by all Roman Catholics Sunday. He granted permis-

BONDING LAW URGED AS CONSTITUTIONAL

State's Attorneys Declare Enactment Forced by Company Acts.

That the state monopoly bonding law passed at the 1935 session of the state legislature is constitutional, and that it reflects the judgment, discretion and foresight of that branch of the state government in an attempt to protect, further and insure the orderly processes and functions of government is the declaration made in a brief filed Saturday with the supreme court by John J. Ledwith and Ginsburg & Ginsburg, special counsel for the commonwealth. The law was upheld by the district court save in one particular which particular Judge Shepherd held did not invalidate the act. The appeal, taken on behalf of the bonding companies, is to be heard by the supreme court next Thursday.

The attorneys say that it is not within the province of the courts to pass upon the wisdom of the legislature in passing legislation; and the burden of proving its invalidity rests upon those who challenge it and that this burden is not sustained by a claim that it

Miss Mary Yoder, Lincoln, Presented as Honorary Colonel of R. O. T. C. at Annual Military Ball Friday Night

Before a crowd of 6,000 people, Miss Mary Yoder was presented as honorary colonel of the University of Nebraska R. O. T. C. at the University of Nebraska Friday evening at the military ball. Miss Yoder, daughter of Mr and Mrs. Byron Yoder of Lincoln, and a member of Kappa Alpha Theta sorority, was chosen by popular vote on the campus early in the fall and her identity was not revealed until she appeared on the stage in full dress uniform. She wore a white suit trimmed with red piping and gold buttons. A three-quarter width red stripe trimmed the sides of the breeches and her white cape, which reached to the knees, was lined with red satin. She wore a black Sam Browne belt and black boots, and a white shako cap with red piping.

The presentation was made about 10 15 p. m. when the sponsors and Pershing Rifles marched on the stage. Two Pershing Riflemen drew back the flags and unveiled a University of Nebraska emblem. The doors of the emblem were opened and the honorary colonel stood revealed. The flower girls presented white carnations to Miss Yoder and talisman roses to Miss Marion Rolland, regimental sponsor. Cadet Colonel Eager and the lieutenant colonels of the regiment mounted the stage and greeted the honorary colonel, who then marched thru the arch of sabers, returned to the stage and reviewed the grand march. HULL SUMMONS ALL AMERICANS TO CO-OPERATION

Comprehensive Antiwar Plan Is Presented to 21 Republics.

BUENOS AIRES. (P). Secretary Hull summoned the 21 American nations to a co-operative effort to help stave off war abroad as well as to preserve peace at home.

Presenting to the inter-American peace conference an eight point program for a comprehensive antiwar structure, the head of the United States delegation pleaded for the creation of an "armory of peace" in the interest of the whole world.

"I strongly entertain the hope," he said, "that a united group of American nations may take common action at this conference further to assure peace among themselves and define their attitude toward war; and that this action may not only demonstrate the happy position of the new world but, tho designed primarily for our own benefit, embody policies of world application, and correspond to the views and interests of nations outside this hemisphere."

Hull stressed the necessity of joint action by the American governments to infuse the will to peace not only in their own peoples but, by example, in the world at large. To this end, he said, frequent consultation among their officials is necessary as well as free intercourse among their peoples.

Words Won't Suffice.

"The delegates of the American nations, meeting here in the face of these grave and threatening world conditions," he said, "must realize that mere words will not suffice. From every wise and practical viewpoint, concrete peace planning, peace views and peace objectives are imperative . . .

"At a time when many other governments or peoples fail or fear to proclaim and embrace a broad or definite peace plan movement; while their statesmen are shouting threats of war, it is all the more necessary that we of the Americas must cry for peace; keep alive the spirit of peace, live

POPE PIUS CONFINED TO HIS BEDROOM

Ailment in Left Leg Said Not to Be Cause for Worry.

VATICAN CITY. (UP). An ailing left leg forced Pope Pius XI to abandon his regular routine and rest in bed. The pontiff took a mid day nap, after which he was lifted from bed at 3 p m and placed in an armchair in his bedroom. The sore leg rested on a stool.

He was able to attend to more urgent matters of state, including the signing of papers accrediting Msgr. Lunardi as nuncio to Bolivia.

Before his nap the pope rested in a chair in his library.

It was officially announced that all audiences with the pope had been "definitely suspended," altho vatican officials said that no one should worry about his health.

A spokesman for the vatican told the United Press that the pope was "indisposed" and that his audiences had been "temporarily suspended."

Meanwhile, a semiofficial Italian radio station announced that the pope was suffering from gout.

It was authoritatively learned that the pope's knee was swollen, caused by uric acid, and that the other leg was not affected.

Prof Arminta Milani, physician to the pontiff, denied that there were signs of paralysis.

His holiness made light of his illness, which he described in a hand-written note regretting his inability to attend a sermon with 30 members of the papal household as "a local disturbance."

Persons close to his holiness feared he might never be able to walk again, and that, if his illness does not approve, he will be forced to resort to a wheel chair.

The Pope's right leg appears to have become worse during the past week, altho he has had no tiring audiences. It appeared that the affected leg reached a point last night where physicians advised him not to use it.

U. S. PROTESTS TO LEAGUE

Says Stand on Narcotics Misrepresented.

GENEVA. (P). The United States protested to the League of Nations Friday that her position on suppression of the narcotics traffic had been misrepresented before the league council. The United States declined to sign the 1936 narcotics convention on the grounds it would weaken, rather than strengthen, existing measures designed to combat the abuse of such drugs. In reporting the action to the council, Dr Augusto Vasconcellos of Portugal attributed Washington's failure to sign to the fact the convention did not provide for criminal prosecution of opium smoking.

OMAHA. (P). A resolution urging a permanent $5,000,000 federal fund to combat grasshoppers, chinch bugs, and other crop pests received a favorable vote here as delegates from 12 states, Canada and Argentina brought to a close their two-day meeting. The resolution urges congress set aside the fund in time for the money to be available to states to meet the challenge of the pests this spring.

The resolution, drawn up by Myron Swenk of the University of Nebraska, recommends the fund be replenished each year.

CABLE SENT TO KING BY LINCOLN ADMIRER

The enthusiasm of B. K. Bushee of Lincoln, self styled "great admirer" of King Edward of the British empire, carried him to the point Saturday of sending a cable to the monarch, who is just now caught between the fires of Cupid and Stanley Baldwin's staunch government.

The cable, sent about 12:45 p. m., reads:

"King Edward, London:

Thousands of your admirers send greetings and support and hope you will carry out your original program."

Bushee did not state what he considered King Edward's original program.

SAYS DIRECT RELIEF COSTS MORE IN 1936

U S C of C. Reports 65 Percent Gain by Federal Agencies

WASHINGTON. (UP). The U S chamber of commerce reported Friday that expenditures for direct relief of unemployment so far this year have been 65 percent higher than during the same period of 1935.

The chamber said this increase has taken place "in the face of improved business conditions with increased employment and opportunities for employment."

The report said that the federal deficit at the end of the 1936-37 fiscal year will "approach $3,000,000,000."

The chamber called attention to the possibility, however, that the size of the estimated deficit may be reduced by expected increase of revenues when income taxes are paid under the 1936 revenue act.

"Reorganization always has presented a major problem," it said. "It has never been greater than at present. It is not only a matter of determining what should be done, but of finding ways of putting it into effect.

"In connection with reorganization discussions, one proposal brought forth looks to the liquidation of the emergency lending activities of the federal government by merging the lending agencies into a single corporation for the purpose of winding up their affairs as soon as possible."

PRESTON CAVE, 39, FOUND BY ROADSIDE

Body, Dragged for Approximately 50 Feet, Badly Broken.

A hit and run driver early Saturday morning took the life of Preston Cave, 39, of 2037 N, on No. 10th about 100 feet south of the Salt creek bridge. Cave, who apparently was walking on the west side of the street when hit, was probably killed instantly as mortuary attendants reported his body was badly broken.

The body when found was lying about eight feet west of the west edge of the pavement and as police reconstructed the accident, the car was traveling south and after hitting the man, dragged him approximately 50 feet. Police did not believe the car ever stopped.

Harry Chamberlain, 1104 D, who said he was with Cave during the forepart of the evening, was questioned Saturday by County Attorney Towle, but could tell nothing of the accident. He said that Cave showed him the way to a gambling place north of West Lincoln about 7:30 p. m. and that between 9 and 11 o'clock he missed Cave and looked for him.

Failing in his search, Chamberlain told the county attorney, he assumed Cave had either caught a ride or started walking back to town, and thought no more about it. He said he came back to Lincoln on No. 10th about 3 a. m.

Cave's death was the 19th auto fatality in Lancaster county this year, five more than there were in the whole of 1935. An inquest was called by Towle for 3 p. m Monday.

The body was noticed by five Havelock young men about 2 a. m. and they reported to police who investigated and called Deputy Sheriff Davis. The young men were Art Tyrrell, Wilber Staberg, Wendell Tyrrell, Lloyd Bishop and Kenneth Carpenter.

Neck and Back Broken.

The body was taken to Splain, Schnell & Griffiths where identification was established by an American Legion card and a drivers license. Attendants said Cave's neck and back was broken, his left leg broken in two places and there were numerous bruises over the body. It was thought Cave had been dead about half an hour when he was found.

Davis said when he located Mrs. Cave about 4 a. m. at her home she was up and worried because her husband had not come home. Mrs. Cave, who works in a tavern at 16th and O, said her husband told her during the evening that he was going out with a friend and that he would probably be back by the time she got thru work at midnight, Davis said. She said she did not know who the friend was but it was later discovered to be Mr. Chamberlain.

Davis said one of Cave's shoes was found 25 feet to the southwest of the body and tire tracks indicated that a car had swerved off the pavement and passed over Cave's body. Davis and police said they had few clues on which to work.

Officers were sent to the West Lincoln taverns in an effort to find out who might have left there about 1 a. m., but crowds which jammed them following the military ball made it impossible.

Cave is survived by his wife, Fern: mother, Mrs. Arthena Cave, Dorchester; daughter, Maxine, brother, Gerald, and two sisters Mrs. Laurel Yauney and Mrs Carl Gallagher, Lincoln. Cave at one time was a Lincoln motorcycle officer.

SNOW, RAIN AND SLEET COMPRISE WEATHER PICTURE

Lincoln Gets .20 of an Inch Friday Night and Saturday.

Snow, sleet, rain and mist from generally overcast skies made up the Nebraska weather picture after a night during which the mercury dropped as low as 10. In Lincoln snow and rain mixed to bring .20 of an inch of precipitation by noon as the mercury hovered near the freezing point after a low of 28.

Transcontinental air lines and bus lines were running somewhat behind schedule and communication companies encountered minor trouble due to ice on the wires.

The eastern and southeastern sections of the state reported mist and snow Saturday while at Nebraska City sleet slickened the streets. All over the rest of the state the snow, which started Friday, continued to fall and ranged up to four inches in depth.

Hastings received half an inch, while in the vicinity of Alliance and from Holdrege to Cheyenne one to two inches fell. Other snow

Executive Vice President of the "Q" Declares Business Improving

Executive Vice President Flynn of the Burlington sat forward in his chair in a private car at the Lincoln depot Saturday noon and expressed confidence in continued improvement of agricultural and business conditions. He glanced out the window at the wet snow falling and nodded at it. "A lot of that is what we need in this section," he said.

He agreed that if the middle west has several good snows during the winter and blossoms out with a first class wheat crop next summer, conditions will continue to improve. To prove that activity is actually on the increase, Flynn cited a 17 and ¾ percent pickup in business on his line in the first ten months of 1936 as compared with the same period in 1935.

"That doesn't look so bad," he said. "Of course it hardly compares with the peak several years ago but it is encouraging." Asked if there is any likelihood more cars will be put on Burlington zephyrs running in this section, as was recently done on the Minneapolis-Chicago streamliners, he smiled. "Well we hope to. If there is enough traffic we'll put on the cars" he said.

Aside from the extensive program for construction of rolling stock at Havelock announced some time ago Mr Flynn asserted, no construction of moving equipment in this section looms for the near future.

2. What sections of opinion in this country favor an American League of Nations?
3. Is the United States ready to join the League of Nations at Geneva?

Frances Perkins Sees Improvement in Employment.

Here to address the closing meeting of the club, Miss Perkins said private employment had shown steady increases during the last nine months.

"The WPA cutdown," she said, "is in response to increased private employment. More people are either finding work or making suitable arrangements with their relatives.

"Last month showed the greatest number of placements in the past three years."

Strike Well Handled.

The labor secretary expects an early settlement of the San Francisco maritime strike, and said it was being handled "extremely well."

Settlement of the "sit down" industrial strike in the near future was also predicted.

"I know nothing about it," was her terse answer to a question concerning prospective revival of the NRA.

The cabinet member was dressed in black. Speaking in a low, firm voice, she proved unusually gracious to interviewers at the station.

Miss Perkins was taken to Gov. Cochran's luxurious office in the capitol where she had time to view portions of the capitol's architectural wonders under the guidance of Mayor Bryan and the other members of her escort. Gov. Cochran welcomed the visitor with glowing tributes to the rainy weather that had come after a long dry fall in Nebraska. As head of the state irrigation department, he had at his tongue's end the appalling decrease in the discharge of water from Nebraska's many streams owing to drouth conditions.

Knows Nebraska Election.

"Are you familiar with the recent discharge of republicanism in Nebraska?" asked Mayor Bryan, always of a political turn of mind.

"Yes," explained Gov. Cochran to Miss Perkins, "only one republican state officer was elected in November, and the people at the same election voted to adopt a constitutional amendment abolishing his office."

Mrs. Cochran joined the party in the governor's office and in conversing with Miss Perkins it was disclosed that both belong to the same sorority, Chi Omega.

More Snow Predicted.

CHICAGO. (AP). The season's first widespread cold weather loosened its hold on the eastern half of the middle west but prepared to take a tighter grip on western states. Forecaster Donnel predicted a sloppy Sunday, with rain or snow, and rising temperatures, for Illinois, Indiana, eastern Wisconsin, eastern Missouri, extreme eastern Iowa, Michigan, and Ohio.

For Kansas and states north of it he forecast colder weather and continued snow.

Heavy snow fell in the Dakotas and northern Minnesota. Strong winds accompanied the snow in the area around Bemidji, St. Cloud and Fergus Falls, Minn. It was 26 below at Bemidji during the night but by 8 a. m. the temperature had risen to zero. Five inches of snow had fallen at Mitchell, S. D., up to 10 a. m. there was no wind or drifting.

and the Cornhusker staff. She is a senior in Teachers college.

Pershing Present.

The new red and white uniforms of the R. O. T. C. band ad the new green and white garb of the Pershing Rifles, honorary military organization, added color to the affair. Gen. John J. Pershing, after whom the honorary group was named, witnessed the ceremony.

The theme of the pageant was the motto of the R. O. T. C. emblem, "Patriotism, Citizenship and Courage." The pageant was composed of three tableaux, examples of the development of these qualities in the American pioneer. The first tableau, depicting patriotism, showed Nathan Hale as a graduate of Yale university and later a captain in the Revolutionary war. His entrance into a British camp and subsequent capture were shown. The tableau closed with his sentence to death because he would not betray his country or sacrifice his ideals for an offer of freedom.

Tribute to Lincoln.

The second tableau was symbolical of citizenship and gave a tribute to Abraham Lincoln. It told of events in his life, his struggle for an education and finally his death at which time Secretary of War Stanton, at the deathbed of the president, spoke these words, "Now he belongs to the ages."

The third tableau depicted the almost forgotten pioneer woman and the courage displayed by her in the building of our new country. The tableau began with the late summer of 1860 and showed a pioneer mother caring for her children and household tasks in a sod house, when they were attacked by Indians. Later was shown a grandmother recounting tales of these times to a new generation.

The prize for the presentation of the honorary colonel, which was more elaborate this year than before, was awarded to Richard L. Rider of Council Bluffs. Mr. Rider was cadet colonel of the R. O. T. C. the first half of last year. A dozen plans for the presentation were submitted. Sponsors were as follows:

sion for exposition of the blessed sacrament for this intention.

Anglican prayers for the monarch already have been invoked by the archbishop of Canterbury.

The Daily Mail, which drove out Asquith and made Lloyd George prime minister, joined the Express, published by Lord Beaverbrook, in supporting Edward. Each controls one of London's three afternoon newspapers. The liberal News Chronicle still was hammering away for a suggested morganatic marriage.

The Manchester Guardian, most influential provincial newspaper, contented itself with repeating Baldwin's objections.

The Guardian pointed out that the crown was important to the dominions as a symbol and that Britons as a whole were accustomed to regard their kings as "figures of warm living humanity."

The cabinet will meet again at 10:30 a. m. Monday to discuss the crisis.

Popular Move Spreads.

The popular movement, which reached its climax in widespread demonstrations in the king's favor thruout London, was reported spreading even among conservative members of parliament.

At noon the whole situation shaped up like this:

1. Official opposition to the king is of the most formidable character. Official and party headquarters say opinion is hardening in conservative ranks that the sovereign will have to choose abdiction as an escape from his present dilemma.

2. British opinion, as reflected by the press and on the streets, supports and sympathizes with the king.

3. Parliament undoubtedly is lined up strongly behind Baldwin on the constitutional aspects of the fight. Whether the constitutional problems involved in the possibility of the king's marriage to Mrs. Simpson are as serious as Baldwin interpreted them may not be known until the whole issue is decided.

Winston Churchill—who might conceivably head a king's party cabinet if Baldwin quits—issued a statement pleading for "time and patience," and asserting: "Parliament has not been consulted in any way or allowed to express any opinion" on the crisis. He challenged the cabinet to interfere.

was enacted because regarded as politically expedient. The history of the law is cited to show that the attitude of the bonding companies in refusing to write a new bond for the state treasurer had interrupted the functions of government, and that it "passed to prevent the recurrence of a situation in which the state of Nebraska was bludgeoned and dragooned into the enactment of legislation in furtherance of the avaricious demands of private, outside corporate interests." Reference is had to the fact that a new bond was not procured until a law had been passed doubling the premium and containing other requirements laid down by the bonding companies.

Eleven propositions of law are laid down as governing the decision, which perforce, as the result of their application to the facts would result in a decree upholding the law. These include the contentions that it is a valid exercise of the police powers of the state; that the constitutional inhibiion against lending the credit of the state is not violated where an administrative agency is established which may not resort to the taxing power of the state but pays losses out of funds credited by it; that there is no delegation of legislative power when such agency is empowered to fix premium rates and pay operating expenses, and when its acts are reviewable by the courts; that it does not encroach upon powers granted municipalities to make their own charters; that the clause providing for removal of officers who do not obey the law is not in conflict with the constitution; that it is an independent act and not subject to rules regarding amendments to existing statutes; that the title is good and that if any part is held invalid and there remains a workable program the law is valid.

MR. BROWN TO PAY A BET

Mr. and Mrs. Will M. Maupin, the former state railway commissioner, will be host at a party at the Lincoln Saturday evening, but Mr. Hugh Brown, editor of the Kearney Hub, will pay the bill. Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Drake, the former shortly retiring as a member of the railway commission, will be guests of honor. Mr. Brown's liability arose out of the fact that he made a bet with Mr. Maupin that Landon would be elected, and it was agreed that the loser should throw a party. Sixty-five guests have been invited. Mr. and Mrs. Brown and Mr. and Mrs. Victor Shofftal, of Kearney will be present.

In keeping with the occasion, the decorations for tables and the place cards will be wilted sunflowers. Dancing will follow the dinner.

COCHRAN'S TOLL FREE BRIDGE PLAN IS UP

Delegations from Several Cities Informally Confer With Governor.

Governor Cochran Friday afternoon received a delegation of representative citizens of towns in Nebraska having toll bridges. Oliver Stephenson of Nebraska City, said to have been the spokesman for the callers, said at the close of the conference he had nothing to say concerning the matters considered. Others in the delegation included Henry Schneider of Plattsmouth, Reed O'Hanlon of Blair, Mayor Crockett of Yankton, S. D., and a representative of the Omaha Steel works. W. S. Dupin of Seward accompanied Stephenson of Nebraska City. One member of the delegation said they were present at the invitation of the governor, but it was said the delegation had asked for an appointment to meet the governor.

Governor Cochran said the matter of some paving of highways was discussed, that Schneider of Plattsmouth was interested in paving the gap in the highway on east O st. near Union. The governor said he believed this could be constructed during the next year.

Regarding his long favored plan of converting all toll bridges on the Missouri river into free bridges the governor said free bridge plans were discussed informally but no conclusion was arrived at.

SCOTTSBLUFF BANS TRAILERS AS HOMES

City Attorney Says Tourists Not Barred But Squatters Must Move On.

SCOTTSBLUFF, Neb. (AP). City Attorney Townsend said Friday night a recent city zoning ordinance prohibits the use of trailer houses as homes in Scotsbluff.

"The ordinance is aimed against anyone moving a trailer home onto a vacant lot and setting up a residence here," Townsend said. "We do not contemplate any action against trailer homes used by tourists in traveling thru or stopping for a time in this city." Several transient families placed their trailer homes on city lots, walled in the running gear, and established residences.

These families, Townsend said, do not have "adequate sanitary facilities in their temporary homes and constitute a detriment to the neighborhood in which they settle."

Peter Rudek recently was fined $1 and costs for setting up a trailer house as a permanent residence. He promised to move his home, and the fine was remitted.

Four of the five counties in the district also named commanders. They are: Butler, Marvin Murphy of David City; Dodge, Frank Bowersox of Hooper; Pold, W. W. Norton of Osceola; and Saunders, Joe Pallat of Wahoo. R. C. Patterson of Lincoln, state department adjutant, awarded distinguished service citations to six posts: Dodge, Stromsburg, Prague, Ceresco, Brainard, and David City.

THE SORCERER.

The Nebraska Wesleyan university chorus gave an enjoyable presentation of the Gilbert and Sullivan comic opera "The Sorcerer" before an audience of more than 400 at the university's auditorium Friday night. Aline Sangazure, the leading feminine role, was taken by Kathryn Greenslit of Stanton, and opposite her as Alexis Poindextre was Dean Reed of Clay Center. The leading dramatic role was enacted by Leonard Paulson of McCook in the character of John Wellington Wells, the sorcerer. His incantation scene was the highlight of the evening's performance.

Other excellent performances were given by Ross Mendell of Sterling, Colo., as Dr. Daly, and Helen Minick of Crawford in the character of Lady Sangazure. The entire performance was marked by the fine precision of the supporting chorus of 65 voices and the orchestra, beatiful costumes, and unusual lighting effects. The plot centers in the desire of Alexis to make everyone fall in love as happily as he does. He prevails upon John Wells to give a magic potion to all of the villagers. The difficulty comes when they find that all are mismated. Mr. Wells pays an extreme penalty and all are restored to their former happy state. The opera was produced by Prof. Oscar Bennett and Mrs. Bennett directed. It will be repeated Saturday afternoon and night.

REESE SAYS BUSINESS MUCH MISUNDERSTOOD

Utah Man Tells Manufacturers They Must Educate Other Groups.

If business is to avoid unjust curtailment due to misunderstanding it must make an effort to present its case intelligently to farmers, professional men, the clergy and other groups, A. C. Reese of Salt Lake City, former vice president of the Associated Industries of Utah, said Friday evening at a dinner closing the 24th annual meeting of the Nebraska Manufacturers association at the Cornhusker hotel.

"Unless you as business men take other groups of society into your confidence, unless they are made aware of your problems, you will again find yourselves isolated and alone," he declared.

The newly elected president, Wilton Van Sickle of Lincoln, was presented the gavel of office by the retiring president, R. A. Freeman of York. More than 150 attended the dinner.

Former Ceresco Man Dies in Colorado.

Funeral services for Ray R. Turney, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clark Turney of Lincoln, were held Friday at Fort Collins, Colo., where he died Wednesday night. His parents are bringing the body to Lincoln for further services and burial.

He was a member of Comet lodge, A. F. & A. M., at Ceresco, and of the Fort Collins Elks lodge. Surviving besides his parents are his wife, Sadie L., and son, Wade.

BREAK IN OLD MAIN.

A checkup Friday afternoon by Commissioner Schroeder on water main breakage nine feet underground below the O st. viaduct caused correction of an earlier report. He found, he said, that it was an eight inch main and not six inch. His first impression was that it had been in service 20 years. He discovered that it was constructed in 1878, or 58 years ago before the viaduct was built. It runs to the Union Pacific depot. From there a six inch extension, constructed more recently, runs to 2nd st., where it joins another main of like size and the two meld into the newly constructed eight inch main to Lakeview. The breakage occurred Thursday night. It was one of the first mains to be laid in Lincoln.

BLACK LEGION MADE FIGURE IN KILLINGS

Pontiac, Mich., Fire Captain Declared Slayer of Fireman and Himself.

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP). Taunts of Black Legion membership, Acting Chief of Police Frank Nelson said, led Fire Capt. William H. Bradburn to kill a fellow fireman and commit suicide. The bodies of Bradburn, named by a grand jury recently as a member of the society of hooded night riders, and of Donald H. Slusher, were found in the kitchen of the fire station Bradburn commanded. On the captain's desk was a note to Fire Chief Frank W. Kuhn, which said: "He talked too much, he should have been changed."

Nelson said he was told Slusher, whose name was not linked with the Black Legion by the grand jury which listed 19 Pontiac police and firemen as members, had directed many jibes at the fire captain. Nelson expressed belief Bradburn brooded over the taunts and the possibility of dismissal. Police Chief Charles McMillan was removed by the police and fire trial board after he was named by the grand jury as a Black Legion member. City Manager William P. Edmonson planned charges against all those so designated.

M'INTYRE

NEW YORK.—Here I am all undressed and in bed at midnight and a big fire breaks out a block or so away. Hear those fire wagons slanging by! Boy, how I'd like to be at that back wheel of the long ladder wagon. You know, hatless, hair blowing and leaning way out rounding corners.

Or running up the ladder with flames licking at heel—it will be like some printer to make it "a heel"—while a spire reels red against the night sky. Rescuing lovely lady stuff. Reaching safety just as a giant wall swoons slowly over with a sickening crash.

Where in the name of Hohokus is that other sock? Oh, there you are! On top of the clock. I must have taken it off just as I started to wind it—the clock, I mean. The dreamy, puttery type. Never know just what I'll do next. Sometimes I start wandering and before I know it I'm over by the river. Or something.

Any person who leaves a nice warm room on a night like this even for a fire has a dash of Richard the Lion Hearted. A good time to open the season for my raccoon coat. Nothing so comforting for a lone red corpuscle as to wrap it up in a lot of fur. Just a corpuscle coddler.

My luck to reach the lines without a police card. If I had people around me who cared a fig for my welfare they would see I didn't go to a fire without that card. But who cares what happens to me? My job is to work my fingers to the bone to make others happy and whatever is left over is mine. I musn't start crying with so many neighbors probably going to the fire, too. I'll walk right thru the police guard as tho I had a card. I look like a newspaperman sometimes, side view. Here I go! What right has that cop to shove me around that way? I thought for a moment he had unhinged my neck. And then jeer: "Better hurry back to New Haven, Chester, you'll be late for chapel." That swipe was for the raccoon coat.

Don't look now, but in my hurry I forgot to put on my pants. But no matter, the good old raccoon hides all. Never in my life did I ever seem to be so in the way. Why can't they make out I'm not here? If it isn't cop shoving me, it's a fireman or some private citizen who has an idea I have no right to be breathing. I have as much right here as anyone. I'm a taxpayer!—and as good a citizen as the next fellow. For two cents, I'd get up on that fire plug and make a speech about my rights. There goes my hat over my ears again. They take me for one of those "Hit him once, you get one cigar" fellows.

Well, I finally—glug, glug, glug—got it. I mean a stray spurt of water. With all the people at this fire I'd be the only one in range. But did you see how I took it standing up? Any muggs who think they can knock me over with a squirt of water don't know their McIntyres. There isn't one of us afraid to face even Niagara Falls. A lot of water dogs is what we are and the back of my hand to them. This raccoon coat is getting a bit aromatic. Wet up a bunch of raccoon hides and one thing you haven't got is a scent from Araby. A bit gamey smelling, I'd say. Well, about the only thing for me to do is shake myself and go back to bed where I belong. One thing that has not happened to me is that I didn't catch on fire myself.

GOODNIGHT STORIES

By MAX TRELL

THE CHILDREN all had to stay indoors because it was raining. But Knarf and Hanid, the children's shadows, decided to go out. Rain didn't get them wet.

So they slid under the back door and stood on the steps leading into the garden. A tiny stream of water was flowing along the edge of the path.

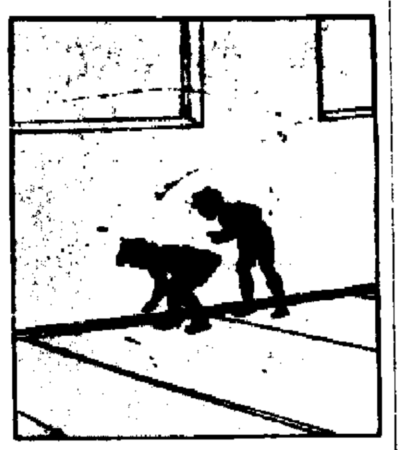
"I guess I'm going for a sail," Knarf said.

"You can't do that," said Hanid. "You haven't got a boat."

"I'll make one."

So Knarf darted under the steps and came out with a wooden match box. "This is the boat," he said to Hanid.

Then he looked around until he found a burnt match stick, and he stuck that in the middle of the boat. "That's the mast," he said.



They slid under the back door.

The next thing he did was to fold a piece of white paper on the mast. "And that's the sail."

Finally he stuck another piece of stick—a flat piece, this time—to the end of the boat so that it reached down into the water. "And that's the rudder. Ship ahoy! Are you coming with me for a sail?"

"Oh, I'd like to very much," Hanid replied. "Only we can't sail very far. The stream is very short, you know."

"We'll go as far as it takes us. Get in. But first," he said, "you'd better make yourself small."

Off for a Sail

So both shadows made themselves small and boarded the boat at the top of the stream of rain water. "Away we go!" cried Knarf.

"Don't let it go so fast, please," Hanid begged. "It's awfully rough."

"This is the smooth part. Wait till we reach the part by the garden wall, where it falls over the stones."

"Oh Knarf—we'd better turn back."

"'Fraid cat! Look at me! I'm not afraid. I know how to sail a boat. I could sail this boat over the ocean."

The very next moment the little boat struck a pebble and—my goodness, it turned upside down!

And Hanid was tossed one way; and Knarf was tossed the other. And as for the boat, if it hasn't sunk, I'm sure that it's sailing yet.

Pellagra Is a Disease of The Skin

Vitamin Deficiency Is Responsible for Ill, Dr. Copeland States

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.
United States senator from New York,
Former Commissioner of Health,
New York City

TOO FEW of us realize that the skin is one of the most important structures of the body. To neglect to care for it is all too common a practice. To resort to self-medication for its disorders is almost as bad.

Without medical advice, it is unwise to apply any ointment, salve or lotion to the skin with a view to controlling inflammation of that structure. Bear in mind that many of these disorders are serious in their nature. It is best to seek wise attention because improper treatment means delay in the cure and perhaps an attack upon the general health.

Let me tell you about an annoying disorder of the skin called pellagra. It is only until within recent years that we have known much about it. As a result of investigations made by the United States public health service, the underlying cause was found.

This is in reality a vitamin-deficiency disease. By this is meant that if the diet is lacking in foods containing certain substances, particularly vitamin G, pellagra will occur.

Caused by Diet

In the studies made, it was found that persons who lived on a diet of corn meal, white wheat flour, white rice, dry beans, salt pork, sorghum or cane molasses suffered from the disease. Further, it was shown that when certain foods known to be rich in vitamin G are used in abundance, pellagra can be prevented. By giving these foods, the disease was cured. Lean meat, eggs, milk, wheat germ, tomatoes and a variety of vegetables and fruits are foods rich in the preventive vitamin.

If you have ever seen a victim of pellagra, you will agree that the skin is unpleasant looking, to say the least. There is a reddish discoloration of the face, neck and hands. The skin peels, shedding in large quantities.

In addition to the skin symptoms, the victim suffers from certain digestive and nervous disturbances. There may be stupor and convulsions. In former years, when little was known about the disease, the victims of pellagra were thought to be suffering from melancholia, hallucinations and even brain disturbances.

It is gratifying to know that with proper selection of foods no one need fear pellagra. It is best to include in the daily diet an abundance of fresh fruits, vegetables, cream, butter, eggs and milk.

Married Comrades

MRS. TICER'S voice lowered itself to a whisper as she said, "But that isn't the worst of it". There was a horror in her eyes which, as I waited for her to explain her meaning, was infecting me. I felt a curious reluctance to put any question to her which should hasten that explanation.

"There's a dead man in the woods up near the shack!" she whispered, sending an involuntary fearful glance in the general direction of the hill, where the sinister watchers of the farmhouse had camped.

"What!" I exclaimed. Then I wasted no more time on talk.

"Wait here," I said as I rushed toward the door. "I'll be back in a minute with the others. The men must hear your story at once. We haven't a second to waste."

She made no protest, and I hurried down the hall to the dining room, bursting in upon the group just as Katie was serving a second round of coffee.

"Bring your coffee to the study," I said. "You must hear Mrs. Ticer's story. She says the men on the hill left two hours ago, and that there's a dead man in the woods up near the shack."

Alarming News

"Are you crazy, Margaret," my mother-in-law asked, "to tell all that before—?" Her head moved disdainfully toward Katie.

I had no opportunity to tell her that I had purposely included my housekeeper among my listeners, even if I had wished to give her that irritating information.

Harry Underwood, with an explosive imprecation coupled with the exclamation, "Grimby!" had leaped from his chair and rushed toward the dining room door. As he went through it, Lillian voiced a question.

"There's no use of the rest of us trailing along, is there, Allen? We'd probably scare Mrs. Ticer out of a year's growth."

There was the deference in her voice which she would have accorded my father, but which I knew she never would have given to Allen Drake had he not stood in the place of "the chief".

Mr. Drake smiled at her.

Madge Is Irked

"Perpendicular or lateral?" he drawled, and I put down another black mark against him. I knew that his experience tended to make him callous to death in someone whom he did not know, but I did not like this jesting mood in the face of such news as Mrs. Ticer had brought.

"Both," Lillian retorted, unsmiling. "She was plainly in a funk when she was talking to Katie, and from long experience I know that Mrs. Ticer is usually a calm, possessed person, and that only something terrifying could have so upset her. Harry, of course, has to see her—he evidently fears something has happened to Grimby—and Madge ought to go back so that Mrs. Ticer can weep on her shoulder if she so desires.

"You, of course, as representative of the chief, will decide your own course, but for the life of me, I cannot see where the rest of us come in as ringside seaters."

Allen Drake Agrees

"Nor do I," Mr. Drake assented promptly, "and I count myself in that category. I am too comfortable to move, and I think the matter of Mrs. Ticer's interrogation can be safely left to old Harry and—my daughter."

His smile flickered again in my direction, and I saw that his impish mood was once more in the ascendency. He had tried conscientiously, I admitted to myself, to impress Dicky with the innocuous character of the "filial caresses" with which Lillian had insisted that my role be invested, but that task accomplished—with success or not, I had no means of knowing until I should have seen my husband alone and observed his behavior toward me—he now had resumed his former attitude, and there was a sudden tension of my nerves as I turned toward the door which told me that I feared the effect of this drawling quip upon Dicky.

"Dedicated to the people of Nebraska and to the development of the resources of the state."—Sept. 7, 1867

"There is no place like Nebraska"

Wallace once said, "America must choose." Now Baldwin is saying, "Edward must choose." Wallie Simpson, however, was not involved in America's choice.

The request for 150 tanks for the army is a demand for new equipment. Further expansions in personnel, other than that already authorized, is not contemplated at this time.

President Roosevelt has been titled "apostle of peace" by the people of Argentina. The enthusiasm South America has demonstrated in connection with the president's visit has been surprising and gratifying.

Madrid has undergone the worst aerial bombardment of the war. A fleet of planes cruised over the city and dropped large quantities of bombs which caused a great deal of damage. The feeling has grown, since these aerial raids have come so thick and fast and with such discouraging efficiency, that the war must come to an end soon.

Resentment is being felt among house members toward the effort of Vice President Garner and a group of senators to name the majority leader in the house. The selection is not their affair. House members should be left free to choose their own leader. Those who resent being "ganged" by the senators are fully justified in their attitude.

It is not because they are not interested or that they do not care to gossip that King Edward's romance is not discussed in Germany and Russia. Dictatorship has perfected press censorship which keeps the news out of these countries and prevents gossip. The advantages of a free people are no better illustrated than in this instance. Imagine the horror of living in a country which had no news of the Simpson escapades and the English king.

The energetic young man who took the republican national convention by storm and quickly nominated his candidate, and made himself national chairman, is ready to step down unless the national committee urges him to continue. Chairman Hamilton is willing to continue his work and is even willing to attempt to wipe out the party deficit. But he does not want to do so unless he has the confidence of the committee. It will require a vote of confidence to keep him on the job.

France has come forward with the promise that she will support Britain with arms in the event that Britain is attacked. That is very nice of the French. What more could England ask, should England be in the asking mood after the Simpson affair is out of the way? The English should, in the same generous manner, reply that England will support France with arms in the event that France is attacked. That is what France is hoping for. It is in that hope that the tender of aid to England has been made.

"The return of the grasshopper" is the song which the entomologists are singing. It seems that the fable of the ant and the grasshopper is a good story and nothing more. The grasshopper is improvident, all right, and when winter comes he may starve. But the female of the species is very diligent when it comes to laying eggs and providing for progeny. Even the intense cold of last winter did not harm last year's hatch and the coming spring is expected to produce grasshoppers in ever increasing numbers.

The protest of mayors of various cities against the drastic curtailment of the WPA relief roll is a nonpolitical protest. It comes from democratic and republican officials, and from independents. The cities and counties are in no position to assume the burden the WPA has lifted from their shoulders. Winter is coming. There are thousands in every state who are dependent upon aid of the sort WPA gives them. The sudden curtailment of WPA activity threatens many thousands in communities large and small, and promises to be something of a stumbling stone in the way of recovery.

WATCHING NEBRASKA.

Under a heading "What Folks Think," the Los Angeles Herald-Express recently ran a number of interviews on Nebraska's unicameral legislature. The general opinion expressed was that this state has begun an experiment that will be of interest to every state in the union. Those quoted thought the one house idea for law making will much simplify the work and should result in better efforts, and a higher grade of legislation. The hope is expressed that this "institutional reform will end many of the abuses of the two house legislative system." Its adaptability to California is also discussed and the opinion offered that it would serve that state much better than the present set-up, which consists of two houses of 40 and 80 members.

Beginning this trial Nebraska is in the spotlight, and the eyes of people in the other states of the union will be focused on what is done here and how results are accomplished.

Members of the new unicameral have been impressed duly with the importance of their task. They are in charge of an experiment ordered by the voters of the state and the manner in which they work out that test will be analyzed, discussed and criticized not only at home but in every other state. The members of the first one house legislature are giving the work to be done much thought. They not only have organization work, and placing in action of the new body, to be considered, but they have many pressing state problems that will occupy time and thought.

It is expecting too much to hope for a perfect working out of the new plan at the first session. Future sessions of this legislature will profit by mistakes or failures of the first session and improve the functioning of this lawmaking body.

There is some differences in the viewpoints of members, one of these being the best method to secure proper and careful consideration of pressing state problems that must be acted upon. Most of the members who have so far expressed themselves have argued against haste. Yet there are some things that will require prompt action.

Members of the legislature have begun a serious consideration of their work before they have been inducted into office. Many of the members have had experience in a two house organization. In the newer plan there are matters to be considered that had been fairly well ironed out in the working of a body of two houses.

The fact that every state is watching Nebraska should put Nebraska legislators to the test of doing their best.

STRIKING AT THE SYMBOL.

Stanley Baldwin, prime minister of England, is an imperialist of the first water. He is John Bull himself, the country squire.

It is a bit striking that the first person to be ground under the heel of this prize imperialist since his return to power with the overthrow of MacDonald and the coalition government, is he who typifies empire in all of Britain's realm, his Britannic majesty, emperor of India, King Edward.

Baldwin is the typification of conservative sentiment in England. He represents, in the present difficulty, the bourgeoisie, the clergy and the petty nobility.

Winston Churchill probably represents a larger proportion of the English people when he raises his voice in caution against the course Baldwin has been taking. Behind that broad, bland Churchill face is a very active mind. Churchill is deep seeing and astute, not bound by prejudices and not limited in his vision by political notions.

Churchill can see the danger that Baldwin has forced on England by his bulldog attack on the king. And Churchill can see the advantage to himself should Edward come out winner. In any event Churchill doesn't care. He has nothing to lose, except that he loses with England, and if he is interested in additional power, which is not at all indicated by his conduct, he may stand to gain by Edward's winning.

In any event when Churchill speaks he speaks for the proletariat and the English proletariat should not be ignored. Churchill feels that the situation has been misrepresented and that the people should be given a chance to indicate their will, that England should not be content with Baldwin's word concerning England's sentiments.

Churchill has two things in mind. In the first place he shares with a number of astute Englishmen the idea that Edward had no thought of marriage when this matter was pushed before the public by the blundering Bishop Blunt. There was no excitement over Lady Furness and others including an American, before Edward became king. Edward has not been greatly changed by his father's death. The excitement over Mrs. Simpson, divorcee, is unwarranted. It has aroused and irritated Edward to the point of rashness.

Churchill also feels that the whole affair might blow over yet; that if bulldog Baldwin could be held off, bulldog Edward might calm down.

The pity of it all, as Churchill and everyone who has given the matter proper thought can see, is that Edward's abdication would only be the beginning of England's troubles. Churchill is not so disturbed over Baldwin's imperialism toward the king, as he is over Baldwin's forcing a division between the people of England that will undoubtedly have serious repercussions at home and again, in the colonies.

Edward is the symbol of empire. Strike him down and the empire may tumble. If the symbol of empire can be struck down so easily, what is to hold that empire together? What is to restrain within the fold, colonies already tugging at the hitchrein?

COMPLETING A CIRCLE.

A Salt Lake Woman's club leader suggests the segregation of vice "so the city may receive revenue now going to grafters." Press dispatches tell us the mayor has approved her plan. She also urges licensing cardrooms as gambling places. Looks like we are just about completing another circle if these ideas find general acceptance. By so doing we would be going back to what was once generally done.

Segregation may bring revenue to a a city, but that revenue is not profit. Receipt of revenue by the city does not cut the grafters out. Those who have memories reaching back to the days when segregation was common everywhere will recall that vice paid heavily for its existence and that not all of the money paid went into the public's till.

The moral question is also involved: whether any government has the right to license its citizens to do wrong. That question is answered in the negative by so many that it is startling to hear that the district president of any woman's club organization anywhere has suggested segregation and licensing.

FOOTNOTES.

The extent of overlapping taxation imposed by the federal and the 48 state governments is summarized in a report just issued by the treasury department, says the New York Times. In 1935 the federal government received $2,271,400,000 from six tax sources, and the various states also received a total of $1,049,900,000 from these same tax sources—estates and inheritances, individual incomes, corporation incomes, gasoline, liquor and tobacco. The situation is in many ways chaotic. There is no agreement regarding what type of taxes ought to be reserved exclusively to the federal or to the state governments. There is no agreement regarding the equitable division of any tax. The federal government taxes the individual, for example, up to 75 percent of his income, and then the state in which he resides as likely as not steps in and taxes his income more.

The problem is one of growing seriousness, yet its practical solution is far from clear. One proposal of a radical nature, sometimes heard, is that the federal government take over entirely the taxes which federal and state governments now both levy, and allocate a certain percentage back to the states. To introduce such a system would doubtless require a constitutional amendment, but apart from this obstacle the system would have important drawbacks. It would be difficult to get the states to agree upon the principles by which these federal revenues would be allocated among them, and probably impossible to find a formula that would satisfy all of them. The amounts returned, again, would depend to a large extent upon the federal government's own needs and revenue policy, and would not bear any necessary relation to the changing needs of each state. Thus a particular state might sometimes find itself with a shortage of revenues and sometimes with a surplus, in the first case being compelled to abandon necessary projects and in the second being tempted into extravagances.

If such a system is rejected, on the other hand, it is difficult to see how any agreement can be obtained between the federal and state governments regarding their respective tax fields. Once more unless a constitutional amendment were adopted and such a device would appear too awkward and rigid, it would be necessary to obtain the agreement of the federal government, and the individual agreements of all 48 states, to refrain from this or that type of taxation in favor of the other agency. Even assuming that this agreement were obtained there would be little assurance that any state would not break it.

These obstacles make any approach to a proper coordination of state and federal taxation look like a rather academic proposal. What makes the proposal seem still more academic at the moment is the pressure for revenues the federal and state governments are now both under. There were 19 states collecting income taxes from individuals or corporations in 1930, that number in 1935 had jumped to 30. Only [illegible] states reported collections from general sales taxes in 1930. 2[illegible] reported such collections in [illegible]. [illegible] taxes once [illegible] bed for them will not quickly be abandoned.

MORE OR LESS PERSONAL.

Old time residents of the city read with sorrow the other day of the death in New Haven, Conn., of Mrs. Florence Richardson Robinson, wife of Dr. Edward S. Robinson, professor of psychology at Yale. Mrs. Robinson was the daughter of Mrs. Nellie Richardson, one of the early women attorneys of the state. She was a graduate of the state university and for years taught in the Lincoln schools. Later she studied in Germany where she earned a doctor's degree. In collaboration with her husband she produced and published several books. She is well remembered by old time residents of the city. The family came here from Hiawatha, Kas.

One of the most congested districts in Lincoln on Saturday evenings is that which centers around 27th and Randolph. More than forty years ago John Gillilan built several structures there with the object of making it a suburban business center, but it was not until the surrounding territory was much more thickly settled that such a center developed. Now the live merchants in that section offer so many inducements to traders that Saturday evenings—and at other times—both sides of narrow 27th are full of diagonally parked cars that make driving between them two abreast a matter of skillful piloting. The situation is much like that at 14th and South, and curiously enough each thru street is patronized by a lot of drivers who could just as easily change their routes, but instead plunge right into the thick of things.

Demands for new buildings and additions that have been pressing upon the state board of control, coupled with the expressed needs of the state university along similar lines, indicate that the legislature will have to consider carefully a rather costly building program for state institutions in spite of the pressure for keeping taxes down. At Hastings, where the state takes care of most of its incurably insane, a million dollars is declared by the management to be necessary to replace the main building, now pictured as in a tottering condition, and to add a south wing. The steady increase in insanity has overcrowded the state hospitals, and additions at several of them are pictured as necessary for proper care and treatment. During the depression the legislature attempted to meet only the most pressing demands.

Gov. Cochran agrees with his predecessor in office, Gov. Bryan, that the attorney general should not be an elective officer, but should be the personal appointee of the chief executive, a firm foundation resting in the fact that the constitution presents an anomaly of placing on the governor the duty of enforcing all laws and then depriving him of the right to name the chief law enforcement officer, the attorney general, making him elective and independent of any control. He will recommend to the legislature the submission of constitutional amendments that will make both the attorney general and members of the railway commission appointive. In the latter position he has the support of present members of the commission.

Senator Burke has promised mid-Nebraska farmers that he will ask congress to appropriate a million dollars to sink wells to be used in connection with pump irrigation for land owners who are unable to finance such construction for themselves. Many of these wells have been sunk in the Platte valley, where water lies comparatively short distances from the surface, and the government money is to be used in digging wells where water levels are far down. The money is to be a loan, not a grant. Pump irrigation has been proved to be a good thing in increasing as well as guaranteeing crops in Buffalo and adjoining counties.

The constitutional convention muffed a good opportunity to shorten the ballot when it had proposals before it that would have eliminated all executive state officers from the elective list except governor, treasurer and auditor. One group favored retention of this, that or the other officer, and in the end the list was allowed to remain as it was when the sessions began. At one time it voted to eliminate the land commissioner, abolished at the late election, but later restored him to the list. Men familiar with the work of the railway commission over a period of years say that the voters have repeatedly turned down qualified men for candidates with a greater personal or party appeal.

Higher rates for telephone companies in the rural districts where the large rural electrification projects of the government and private companies are to be located is indicated by the request made by the Lincoln company for authority to charge the metallic rate where grounded rates now prevail. In the grounded lines the earth is used as one of the parts of the circuit, and the heavily-charged electric power lines sadly interfere with talking over such lines. This forces construction of a return wire making what is known in telephone circles as the metallic type of construction, which means added investment and higher maintenance costs.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS.

Q. What is the average size of a newspaper?

A. Cranston Williams, secretary of the Southern Newspaper Publishers association, in a recent speech, said: "The average column of reading matter runs from 1,200 to 1,500 words. There are eight columns in a page. Multiplying further by eight pages as an average quantity of daily reading matter, it will be seen that something more than 100,000 words appear each day in your newspaper. The average reporter writes about two columns or 3,000 words per day. He would write around 900,000 words per year. Then, contrast those figures with the fact that the average novel comprises from 50,000 to 100,000 words. Each day the newspaper averages more words than a novel."

Q. How many women in this country are playing field hockey?

A. About 10,000 women have taken up this sport.

Q. Are Franklin D. Roosevelt and Vincent Astor related to each other?

A. They are not actually related, but there is a family connection. James Roosevelt, half-brother of Franklin D. Roosevelt, married Helen Astor, sister of John Jacob Astor, who was the father of Vincent Astor. James, Franklin's half-brother, was therefore an uncle by marriage to Vincent Astor.

Q. How many godchildren has Hitler?

A. Chancellor Hitler is the godfather of 12,620 children. He is said to be willing to assume that obligation to any tenth child in any pure Aryan family.

Q. Where is the volcano called El Misti?

A. The volcano is east of Arequipa City, Peru. It is 19,200 feet high

Q. How old is Clifford Odets, the playwright? Please give a list of his plays.

A. Mr. Odets is 30 years old. He has written the following plays: Awake and Sing, Waiting for Lefty, Till the Day I Die, Paradise Lost, and The Silent Partner.

MEN AND THINGS.

The rich treasures laid up in the banks of the United States are attracting the envious eyes of foreign governments that need more money to prepare for the war nine out of every ten persons believe is coming. France is said to be thinking about calling a conference about the war debts upon payment of which they welched. It will ask it whenever it has settled on the details which will consist, we assume, of offering to pay us a billion if we will loan them two billions. Catch them paying us the billion first!

The federation of labor has it figured out that all workers should get something like $3,600 a year and that no one should work for less than $1.77 an hour. The leaders must have been talking with Doc Townsend. High wages inevitably mean high prices, because the labor cost is usually the largest part of the total cost, and unless we can reduce that labor cost proportionately in the terms of percentages, the workers would not be much better off under a high wage scale and unless also those who could not qualify by reason of occupation, like the farmer, remained unaffected as to income.

Now that everybody in England except the newspapers knows all about the king's romance with Wally, the editors are raising the self-imposed censorship and have about concluded to print something about it. We had heard so much about the free press in England that it came with a sort of a shock to find that the publishers did not really think they were free to print what they pleased, so long as it was true, about the monarch's doings, but no press can be free when it dare not print all the legitimate news.

Cab companies operating in Omaha have asked the state railway commission to authorize the addition of a number of vehicles on the ground that demand for such service has increased. This sounds a bit strange when taken in connection with the announcement that the government was reducing the number of persons on relief and employed on federal work assignments. This is not so much of a joke as it might seem when it spreads itself out before reader eyes. A year or so ago the same cab companies explained their need for additional permits by saying that the government employes had increased.

The league of women voters is wondering why more women are not elected to office, and we assume that it proposes to do something about it. If the test is to be that of public employment rather than election to office, the protesting leaguers will find deep satisfaction in strolling thru the offices at the statehouse, where at a guess we should say there are three times as many women employed as there are men. Outside of the engineering department the women greatly outnumber the men employes in every office. The pay is less than elected officials receive, but the grand total is more.

DR. BRADY'S HEALTH TALK.

Oxygen Injection Versus Blood Transfusion.

It is questionable whether blood corpuscles transferred from one person to another thru transfusion of blood survive in the blood of the recipient. The beneficial effect of transfusion is rather stimulation of the patient's own blood building powers and the restoration of volume or bulk to the circulating blood. These are not the sole purposes of transfusion. Sometimes the antitoxic or immune value of the convalescent donor's blood may be required to help the recipient's battle. Sometimes the clot-forming ferment in normal blood may be needed to help control bleeding in hemophilia (the bleeder state) and allied maladies. But in such emergencies as shock, exhaustion, hemorrhage the immediate purpose of the injection of healthy blood into the veins of the patient is to stimulate the patient and tide over the crisis.

In such cases anoxia or anoxemia (lack of oxygen in the tissues of the body or in the blood) is the critical feature. The patient is unable to oxygenate his own blood. In transfusion, however, it is the routine practice to draw the blood from the vein of the donor. This blood may carry some oxygen, but still the blood in the veins has given up most of its mobile oxygen to the cells and tissues and must be oxygenated in the lungs of the recipient after it is injected into the recipient's veins.

If the patient is unable to oxygenate his own blood how can he oxygenate the venous blood of another person? In actual practice it is found that in cases of shock, collapse or hemorrhage blood transfusion gives no better results and perhaps not as good results as intravenous injection of a pint of gum saline solution (6 percent gum acacia with 95 percent saline) to fill the empty vessels and give volume to the blood, and at the same time to inject subcutaneously about the same quantity (a pint) of oxygen gas. Today the physician may carry in his bag the necessary apparatus for the emergency administration of oxygen in this way, and oxygen so administered is avidly taken up by the blood even when the natural oxygenation in the lungs fails. Enough nascent oxygen for the injection is produced by placing a special lozenge in warm water, and the gas so produced is washed with water before it is injected. No oxygen tank is required.

THE PUBLIC MIND.

Asks a Question.

ALEXANDRIA.—We have a neighbor who is hungry, so hungry there is much pain and torment. This neighbor was once well fed and comfortable. Now he is under medical treatment financed by charity.

This hungry neighbor paid for pigs killed by kind friends but received no pigs in return. This hungry neighbor paid for restricted plantings and seedings of foodstuffs, paid for plowed under cotton and received in return larger debts.

He is begging now. Just plain begging. There are those who mock and jeer him, those who took his money, but care not. He seems to regard begging more honest than destroying foodstuff in the drouth area.

We admit that he is wrong in his mind. He admits his error. We admit that he is the only one of his kind in the neighborhood but should we permit him to continue his begging? What would you suggest? Has one of your readers a suggestion?

Blow at American Liberty.

HUMBOLDT.—The June 20, 1936, issue of the Army and Navy Register, a blow is struck in the real nazi style at American liberty, a move that must not be ignored as its official source will bear heavily upon the conduct of every sailor and soldier and menace the liberty of every citizen.

Here are its exact words and threats:

"We find that the Methodist church as an institution, does not endorse, support or propose to participate in any war."

That word any is an untruth, it does in its peace resolutions say "We do not endorse, support or purpose to participate in war as an institution."

But the Register goes on to threaten:

> "We propose that the war and navy departments terminate under proper procedure the commissions of all Methodist chaplains in the regular land or naval forces who uphold the peace pact of Methodists. We propose that the war and navy departments terminate for the convenience of the government, all reserve commissions held by Methodist clergy and laymen. We propose that the war and navy departments refuse to accept for a citizens' military training camp or for instruction in collegiate officers' training corps units, any member of that church."

Do you notice that in that last proposal, even if a certain member of the church has not endorsed the peace pact of the conference of the M. E. church, he can not retain his membership in the church and take part in training?

Further in the nazistic bombast they cite the church as recalcitrant, disloyalty — promoting church."

Just why the M. E. church was selected as the target of all this and still more dictator Hitlerizing is not apparent, as I have before me the peace pronouncements of the general conference of 1936 and see in it no strong argument and proposals against war than almost every other church and peace organization has put forth.

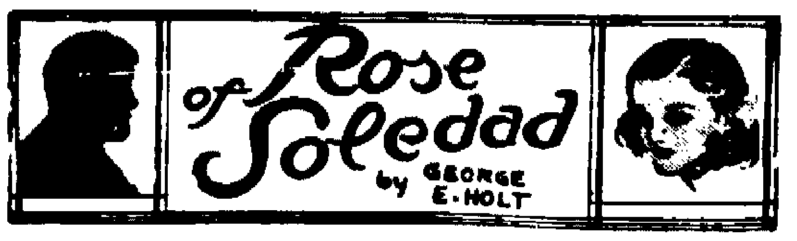
But wake up Americans, those officers would not be long in advising their soldiers to set first to American churches, to arrest liberty or peace speakers, to suppress free press and inaugurate real European domination over our own country.

If you want still far more turbulent tyranical argument, just obtain a copy of Army and Navy Register, 511 Eleventh st., N. W. Washington, D. C., the June 20, 1936 issue. Turn to page 566 and study "Can It Happen Here."

J. O. SHROYER

Silas: Did that city feller have any luck with his vegetables last year?

Hiram: In a way. He got a sunstroke and collected $200 from a health insurance company!



Shane was left to his own devices, after Pepito had been brought in and introduced. A small, wizened little man was Pepito, weighing about a third as much as his fat esposa, Margarita. But he had brilliant black eyes, very restless and intelligent, and was not badly dresed, and was most polite, assuring him that the house was honored by the Senor Americano, and that if Margarita failed to make him comfortable and to give him plenty to eat and a clean bed to sleep in, he, Pepito, would beat Margarita until she howled like a dog. Absolutamente, senor. Como un perro!

After these assurances, Jose explained that he and Pepito would go and drink tequila and see what they could find out about the Rattlesnake. It was too bad that el senor could not go with them and drink, but....ojala! Maybe Pepito had a bottle of tequila to keep Mr. O'Hara company. Pepito did have. He dashed away, shouting at Margarita—who apparently was in the next county. Returned quickly with a tall bottle containing a white liquid, a glass. Set them upon the table; bowed to Shane. Said "Buen salud, senor,"—Good luck, Mister! and he and Jose took their departure.

Jose, his jaw again covered by the blue handkerchief, Pepito trotting beside him, made his way back into the town. On the road he explained the situation to the little man, who trotted and listened and said nothing until Jose's story was told. Then—and his Spanish was admirable:

"Jose," he said. "I always thought that my cousin and your brother, Sam, was concerned with matters that the law would disapprove of. I have heard it hinted here in Tijuana—also in Mexicali—that he was in bad business. As for Rodrigo Guiterrez, who calls himself the Rattlesnake, he is a dangerous man. Of him also I have heard things. Talk of smuggling—opium, Chinese, alcohol. I think we can find Rattlesnake without much trouble. But when we find him, I think it will be very wise to kill him at once. Quietly and swiftly."

"That is what I have told the Americano," said Jose, and explained Shane's ideas on this subject. "And so I suppose it must be done his way."

"It is not a good way," said Pepito. "Nevertheless, as you say, if that is what the American wants, then that way will we do it. I think if we go and sit in the Cafe Espanol and drink a bottle of tequila, we shall find out whether the Rattlesnake is still in town or not. And if he is, perhaps we can discover where he lives."

The Cafe Espanol was not a big cafe. It was popular with the Mexicans; having no orchestra and being on a side street, most visiting Americans never found it. It was a narrow, long room, with partitions thrusting out from one wall, like a real American restaurant, a poolroom in the back, a bar along the other wall.

"Hello, Loreto," Pepito greeted the white aproned bartender. "Bring us a bottle of La Viuda Martinez, eh?"

He and Jose seated themselves in one of the little booths, back toward the poolroom, and upon the table between them the bartender set a bottle and two glasses.

Pepito reached a hand in his pocket. Jose stopped him.

"Sam was my brother," he said, and handed the bartender a coin representing about one-third of what American visitors paid for a bottle of La Viuda—The Widow Martinez—"the most popular woman in Mexico," as she was called.

Jose poured two half tumblerfuls of the fiery stuff.

"Kiss the Widow," said Pepito, and raised his glass to his lips.

"Take the rattles off the Rattlesnake," countered Jose, and drank.

Time passed, and the tide in the bottle ebbed. Men came and drank and went out, or came and drank and sat—but the Rattlesnake did not come. Jose grew restless. "Perhaps some other place," he suggested.

But "Wait," said Pepito. "I think he will come. I see him here more than any other place. When he gets really drunk he comes here."

Another half hour passed, and the Widow was empty.

Then there came loud voices from the doorway, drunken men shouting, laughing. It grew louder, came into the cafe.

"That," said Pepito, "is the Rattlesnake."

"He knows you?" asked Jose.

"Yes," answered Pepito. "And you?"

"I don't know," replied Jose. "He may have seen me."

"Be on guard then," warned Pepito. "He may pass this way."

Jose adjusted his handkerchief up to his eyes. "I shall sneeze," he said, "if he passes. I have a cold. And also I have a cold knife near my right hand."

"Do not use it," warned Pepito. "Do not think of using it. Not here. And if he stops, remember you are Hernando Monroy, from La Paz, at his service."

But the Rattlesnake and his friends stopped in the front part of the cafe.

"Here, bartender," shouted the Rattlesnake. "Attention! Bring drink, much drink. Sit down, friends. Here we will spend the rest of the day—and the night." The idea met with a chorus of approval.

"I think," whispered Pepito "that he will stay and become very drunk. Let us now return to the house, and eat. Later we will return and watch. If the Rattlesnake drinks enough, as he usually does, he will lose his reason. We will meet him when he leaves this place. We will take care of him, eh? And when he wakes up, he will be much astonished."

"Good," approved Jose. "Tonight we should be able to pull his fangs."

They made their way out thru the poolroom and the rear door, and returned to Shane waiting for them in the casa de Pepito.

Around midnight the Rattlesnake and one remaining friend reeled from the Cafe Espanol waving empty bottles.

They staggered down the dark street, talking nonsense.

At last the friend stopped, sat down carefully against a board fence.

"I sleep here," he stated, positively. "Good enough." He slumped over.

MALLON

WASHINGTON.—King Edward's friends here never contended he was a wizard at statesmanship. They knew also he would sooner or later attempt to assert his independence of the British politicians in his private life. That seems to have been his one ambition for years. But no one suspected he would be foolish enough to fight an issue he had no chance of winning. They expected him at least to choose a question in which he had the right and popular side.

Behind the turn of events during the last few days is, of course, the same old inside struggle between king and prime minister, going back to Victoria's day and beyond. Their relationship in the British government often makes for a natural conflict of personalities, which Edward's predecessors have solved by invariable subservience.

Those who know about such things are wondering what could have happened this time if the spunky but unwise king had chosen an issue in which the church was not involved. He might have had a chance if he had made a marriage choice, or selected a line of private conduct, displeasing only to Premier Baldwin, whom he never liked anyway. As it was, Baldwin wisely remained in the background and let the church take the leadership in presenting the problem to the British nation.

The impression is general in official quarters here, therefore, that the king really lost his fight when he first chose the issue. To abide by the wishes of church and cabinet meant permanent recognition of his limited sphere. To abricate meant surrender.

Published dispatches relate that Baldwin told the king the American government had informally advised him it was opposed to the marriage.

Mr. Baldwin must have misunderstood what he heard from Washington, or else he was using an imaginative argument to influence the king. The American government has told him nothing, informally or otherwise. It will not even whisper internationally about the matter, because it has no interest in it. The ex-Mrs. Simpson is a British subject.

But if it makes any difference to Mr. Baldwin or the king, most American officials personally agree with the stand taken by the cabinet and the church. They timed their announcement of the state department ban on alien marriages of American diplomats to indicate what they thought about international marriages of American diplomats. It was a wholly indirect step and had long ago been decided upon in connection with another matter, but it was nevertheless a hint.

Three or four government officials here know Mrs. Simpson, and they are for her. The others, who look at the matter more abstractly, as a problem of government, decidedly are not.

What interests the American government more than the Simpson affair is the British employment figure indicating a new high record at 11,103,000, an increase of 787,000 above the boom peak of 1929. The booming building industry there accounts for much of the disparity between their unemployment and ours. Production in the British building materials and building groups constituted a record for the third quarter of 1936. Ours was about 50 percent of normal.

Readers out thru the country have detected one factor holding back building which was omitted from a recent analysis published in this spot. That is taxes.

The Iowa Association for Tax Justice says the tax load on invested real estate makes it cheaper to get a trailer and live in it, rather than rent or build. The citizens volunteer committee of Minnesota asserts tenant occupied property is almost unsalable at any price in some sections because of local and state taxes, and large residences are worth a small fraction of their cost or assessed value.

Among the many talked of legislative suggestions which will never be passed is the one of the senate campaign investigating committee proposing to limit presidential campaign expenditures to $1,000,000 for each party.

Practical politicians [illegible] it would only cause campaign organizations to breed up into a variety of subsidiaries and not decrease the total amount spent by all. While the national committees would undoubtedly limit themselves to a million apiece, their countless subsidiaries could each raise and spend a million. Other obvious subterfuges are limitless.

It would require a constitutional amendment to prevent any citizen from spending what he chooses in a political campaign.

The state department has several Wallie Simpson cases of its own making on its hands as a result of its alien marriage ban. Officials do not want to talk about it but the kickbacks from the foreign service workers have been strong and hard. It seems that three or four American diplomats were engaged to foreign women at the time of the announcement. The United States government may have several breach of promise suits in store.

Football Coaches Of Nation Suggest Dozen Changes In Grid Code

M'LEMORE

Hits and Misses on the Biltmore Open

BY HENRY M'LEMORE.

CORAL GABLES, Fla. (Copyright, U. P.) A few chips and putts from the Biltmore's $10,000 open golf championship: "There has to be a bum in every crowd," was Lawson Little's remark when he missed a ten-foot putt on the fifteenth hole for a birdie, after both Horton Smith and Henry Picard had holed long rollers for their birdie 4's. Tommy Armour had an opening round of 75—not so good—but half an hour later, over the bridge table in the locker room, he picked up a hand that contained two ace-kings, an ace-king-queen, and an ace-jack, which is very good! And it won plenty of money for him and his partner, Bobby Cruickshank, from opponents Leo Diegal and Jimmy Thomson.

Gene Sarazen felt uncomfortable with his 69 on the first round. . . . Gene's specialty is dawdling back and then coming with a rush in the last 36 holes. . . . When the first tee announcer failed to mention his Australian championship in introducing him, Sarazen stopped his back swing and told the folks of his conquest "down-under."

"You would think I didn't beat anything but a field of kangaroos in winning that title, the way people overlook it," he said. The announcer wasn't lax in his introduction of Jimmy Thomson, however, and pointed out that here was the world's longest driver. Whereupon Jimmy hit one that was yards behind the shots of his partners, Sarazen and Al Zimmerman of Portland.

Dog Perfect Gallery.

Bill Burke, the former open champion who has abandoned the long, black, and very evil cigar he used to smoke, for a pipe, is always followed on his round by "Niblick," his finely bred Scotch sheep dog. . . . "Niblick's the perfect gallery," Burke says. "He never makes a sound and he likes me just as well when I shoot a 79 as he does when I tear par apart." Horton Smith's brilliant 31 on the first nine, which broke the course record for the distance, had the bookmakers busy. The bookies had Smith posted at 12 to 1 when he started, but with every birdie they erased the figures and wrote in newer—and lower—ones. By the time he hit the turn Horton was 3 to 1—incidentally, if Smith had holed his first putt on the ninth green he would have had 8 putts for 9 holes—a feat unprecedented in a major tournament. He had one putt on each of the first six greens and none on the seventh when he chipped in from off the green.

There were two holes in one the first round which is an all-time record. Jack Forrester got the first one on the second hole, and when his number six iron shot plopped into the cup he was very nonchalant.

Abe Gets An Ace.

"I mustn't forget how I played that one," he remarked to the gallery. Another veteran, Abe Espinosa, had the other ace—Abe bagged his on the 14th, also with a six iron, and he too was unbelievably calm. "After twenty-five years," he said as he walked toward the green, "I've finally mastered this game." Bobby Cruickshank, the Richmond old timer, believes something should be done about the youngsters who shoot such hot golf these days. "The babies make it mighty tough on us old guys," he opined, "and I'm all for organizing a tournament restricted to golfers with grown children.

Sammy Belfore, of Daytona Beach, Fla., was in the first threesome to tee off, and the starting time was just a little past six in the morning. Sammy had an 80 and excused it on the grounds that he was stymied by a milkman on the fourth hole. Smith's 68 won him the case of rum offered as a prize for the lowest first round score, but he doesn't drink anything stronger than pasteurized milk.

PASS INTERFERENCE KICKING FREE BALL SUBJECT OF DEBATE

Crowley Will Seek Change in Penalty One Second Shift Rule.

ABOLISH EXTRA POINT?

By HERBERT BARKER.

NEW YORK. (AP). The national football rules committee notoriously is slow to make any basic changes in the playing code but the coaches, individually, have suggested a dozen or more revisions that may come up for discussion, if not action, at the annual rules committee sessions.

Most of the debate, naturally, will revolve about the provisions that caused the most trouble in the past season—those involving forward pass interference and the kicking of a free ball.

But coaches, responding to an Associated Press poll, also suggested changes in many other rules including those affecting the use of the shift, the point after touchdown, substitutions, and the lateral pass.

Jimmy Crowley of Fordham and Duquesne officials are concerned over the 15 yard penalty exacted when the offensive team, after shifting, fails to pause a full second before putting the ball in play. Fordham lost more than 100 yards in the St. Mary's game for infractions of this rule and Duquesne lost as much or more in the Detroit game.

Crowley suggests a five yard penalty would be enough and A. B. Maginnes of Lehigh, a well-known eastern official, agrees.

Clarence Overend, graduate manager of athletics at Carnegie Tech, complains on the other hand that the Tartans suffered frequently because officials failed to call the penalty. He wants strict enforcement of the "one second" rule.

Calls For Specialist.

The point after touchdown, long a subject for acrid debate, suffers its annual bombardment. Hunk Anderson of North Carolina State and Ed Walker of Mississippi, each of which dropped one 7-6 decision during the campaign, would abolish it entirely. Jack Hagerty of Georgetown doesn't like the idea of kicking the extra point because that calls for a specialist, entirely distinct from the team play which the game otherwise stresses. He would count first downs as a substitute for the point after touchdown or put the ball on the five yard line with two tries to take it over.

Edward "Slip" Madigan of St. Mary's Gaels would eliminate the five yard penalty charged against the team asking time out more than three times in one half. He believes this rule handcaps teams which have few reserves. Along the same line, Jimmy Phelan of Washington wants unlimited—substitutions. The rule now states that a player withdrawn may not re-enter the game in the same period.

Madigan also suggests a fifth official to watch lateral passing plays only. The St. Mary's coach thinks at least 50 percent of the laterals now used really are illegal forward passes.

Navy spokesmen said they'd like to see the goal posts back on the goal line, presumably to encourage a return of field goal kicking.

Bergman Has Point.

Arthur "Dutch" Bergman of Catholic university would like to have a ball, after going out of bounds, brought in 15 yards instead of ten to give the offense more room. A little more drastic but along the same lines is a suggestion by Lawrence "Buck" Shaw of Santa Clara that the playing field be widened from 160 feet to 190 feet.

Charley Bachman of Michigan State, has two changes in mind. One would make identifying numerals on players' chests mandatory. The other would forbid a player stepping out of bounds, to return to the field and make a block or tackle on that play.

Don McCallister of South Carolina would make recovery of a fumbled or loose ball behind the goal line a touchback irrespective gests changing the rule that costs a team possession of the ball when of which team recovers.

Harvey Harman of Penn suggests changing the rule that costs a team possession of the ball when a foul is committeed while the ball is in the air. He would make the penalty, instead, 15 yards from the spot where the foul is committed. Navy scored a touchdown against Penn in 1935 after a penalty for clipping was called against Penn while a navy punt was in the air.

D.X. SAYS 'NO SALE' TO 'OIL BOWL' DEAL

Husker Mentor Points Out Big Six Statute and Home Sentiment.

KANSAS CITY. (AP) Coach Dana X. Bible of the University of Nebraska said Friday, Nebraska will not play a post season football game at Tulsa, Okl.

Here for a meeting of Big Six conference athletic directors, Bible answered reports of an "Oil Bowl" game projected for Nebraska and Arkansas by the Tulsa junior chamber of commerce.

"We have not been approached relative to a post season game," he said. "We have a conference rule that football ends the Saturday following Thanksgiving and I know the sentiment of the University of Nebraska authorities there will be no post season game at Tulsa, Okl."

PITT PARTISANS RISE TO DEFEND PANTHERS

Smoky City Writers Point Comparison Records Rose Bowl Foes.

PITTSBURGH. (AP). Pittsburgh sports writers answered criticism of the selection of the University of Pittsburgh's football team for the Rose Bowl game with assertions that Pitt's record is as good as that of its opponent, the University of Washington.

Al Abrams, in the Post Gazette, said:

"Pitt was beaten once and tied once, so what? Washington has the same record and was considered good enough to represent the west coast in the Rose Bowl. The Panthers' tough schedule and convincing triumphs over Notre Dame, Ohio State and Nebraska certainly entitled the Sutherland eleven to the consideration they received in the matter."

James J. Long, in the Sun-Telegraph, observed that selection of Pitt to play the Huskies in the Rose Bowl and of Duquesne's Dukes for the Orange Bowl game at Miami "makes Pittsburgh the most prominent spot on the entire football map."

BOB FELLER CASE IS STILL UNSETTLED AS LANDIS KEEPS SILENT

Baseball Czar Reported as Investigating Actions Slapnicka.

INTERVIEWS WITNESSES

CLEVELAND. (AP). The force over young Bob Feller, American league strikeout record holder, took a new turn Saturday with published reports that Commissioner Kenesaw M. Landis was "investigating the conduct of Cyril C. Slapnicka," Cleveland Indians' general manager, in the fight to retain the prize hurler.

"You're liabl eto hear almost any kind of story now," asserted Slapnicka in denying any irregularities, "but I don't care to be quoted on any matter in Judge Landis' hands.

"There's no connection between an adverse decision on Feller and my job. Of course, it would be a terrible blow if the boy is declared a free agent."

At the Montreal minor league convention where baseball officials gathered this week, Landis "called in witnesses on this phase of the $100,000 battle for the 17 year old schoolboy," said the Plain Dealer.

The paper did not specifically state the reported "irregularities." Slapnicka returned here after a week's absence, during which he attended last Monday night with Feller a meeting of the 4-H clubs in Chicago. He explained his absence from the Montreal meeting as due to illness of his wife.

Lee Keyser, president of the Des Moines club of the Western league, which seeks to have Feller declared its property, said he had talked with Judge Landis recently but would not reveal the nature of their conference.

Conferred With Keyser.

"Slapnicka was out to Des Moines to see me some time ago," the paper quoted Keyser as saying over long distance telephone, "but I can't make any further statement. The entire case is in the judge's hands and until he reaches a decision, I'd rather not say any more about it."

Landis was enroute to New York, where the major league meeting starts Monday at which baseball men hoped Landis would rule on whether Feller would remain the property of Cleveland, go to Des Moines or be declared a free agent.

Keyser's attack on Cleveland's possession of Feller is based on a major-minor league agreement forbidding a major league club to sign directly any amateur other than a college player.

The Indians claim that the Iowa schoolboy first was signed by Fargo-Moorehead, sold to New Orleans and then bought by the Indians. He pitched no minor league games and joined Cleveland in mid-season last summer.

The New York Yankees and the Boston Red Sox both were reported to be ready to offer $100,000 for Feller's services if he is declared a free agent. Slapnicka, Alva Bradley, president of the Indians, and Manager Steve O'Neill will leave Sunday night for the New York meeting.

JOE DUSEK TACKLES KENNEDY MAIN BOUT

Joe Dusek of the Omaha wrestling Duseks, has been signed by the Eagles club to meet Jack Kennedy in a return match here Tuesday night. Their last match ended in a draw when both were knocked out.

Rudy LaDitzi and Earl Wampler another pair of wild men will exchange courtesies in the semi-windup while Warren Underhill and Ed Kramel will clash in the prelim.

Lardner Dares Hope Foreigner May Make Difference Heavyweight Scene

Gunnar Barlund Looks to Be Comer With Plenty Power in Mitts.

BY JOHN LARDNER.

Copyright by NANA (The Lincoln Journal and other newspapers).

NEW YORK.—A heavyweight fighter you will hear a lot about these next few months is Gunnar Barlund, the Forward Finn, and maybe it would be a good thing to make his acquaintance now.

No fight observer likes to feel that he is going overboard on a foreign menace, foreign menaces having been two pesos a bushel since the day Bombardier Billy Wells came over her from England with a glorious reputation and an Athenian torso and promptly became very horizontal, striking a style note for British pugilism that still holds force from Rangoon to Piccadilly.

I can remember only three foreign heavyweight menaces who ever amounted to shucks. They were Max Schmeling, Luis Angel Firpo, and Paulino Uzcudun. I slip Paulino in merely because he was a tough man to beat. He never accomplished much on the credit side of the ledger. Schmeling and Firpo each had something—Schmeling a strong body and a cool fighting head, Firpo a charge of homicide in his mighty right arm.

Does Look Good.

This Forward Finn, Gunnar Barlund, may be different, and he may not be. I would hate to be caught calling him a coming champion. But he does look good, and, until events prove otherwise, I think you can designate the Gunnar as the best of the recent foreign menaces and a gentleman who might some day give Joe Louis some trouble.

The Finn is always moving forward. He shuffles toward you on feet as flat as the great mesa, his prominent ears flapping gently in the breeze. His eyes, blue as a fish's chest, do not seem to be looking at anything in particular. His torso is knobbly, and his cropped head is built along the lines of a dum-dum bullet.

He gets inside and flails your body, protecting himself so well that he seldom takes a punch in return. Then perhaps he plays your chin for a while, until your body is open again. He has a high right guard and a hooking left. Once in a while, he seems to uncover and invite a blow to the head, but, while you are getting set to throw it, the Gunnar has shot a hard right to your own cranium and is all bundled up again, like a kid playing in the snow.

Methodical Fighter.

The Gunnar, being a methodical fighter, seldom cuts loose until the closing rounds of the fight, unless he sees a surefire opening. But when he thinks he has his man taped and measured, he discards caution and begins hooking rapidly with both hands. His left hurts and his right appears to be anaesthetic. Frankie Connelly, the big and game Bostonian whom the Finn stopped in the ninth round at Uncle Mike Jacobs' Hippodrome the other night, really went out like a taper when he caught one of those rights. He threshed around on the floor like a decapitated fowl until the boys in his corner dragged him away.

Barlund is a Spartan soul. They feed him simple fodder and nourish his brain with a movie now and then. In Finland he was first a farmer and then a factory hand. He looks to be a cold, rugged, arctic sort of fellow. You can picture him trudging with great nonchalance thru the Scandinavian snow and washing his face and hands with ice cold fjord water.

He is managed by Mr James Bronson, the celebrated wholesale importer of beef on the hoof, and Mr. Honest Paul Dawski, the German expatriate who also handles Walter Neusel and Erich Seelig. Pickings have been a trifle lean for Mr. Bronson and Mr Damski of late, and the Gunnar looks to them like money in the bank.

FOUR HEADLINERS ON SATURDAY GRID CARD

Southwest Title at Stake as Arkansas U Tackles Texas Longhorns.

NEW YORK. (AP) The south southwest and Pacific coast held out for a little while Saturday as the rest of the country packed football up in mothballs for another year.

Of chief interest on the slim program was Arkansas' battle with Texas for the Southwest conference title and three intersectional clashes in which Notre Dame met Southern California, Temple took on St. Mary's and Manhattan faced the erratic Texas Aggies.

The Arkansas Razorbacks needed a victory over the Longhorns for sole possession of the Southwest conference crown. A defeat would give the title to Texas Christian.

The game between Notre Dame's highly regarded outfit and Southern California's team which had not won a game since taking over Stanford in October, was expected to draw the day's largest crowd. The clash between Temple and St. Mary's, a pair of disappointing teams this year, marked Pop Warner's first official return to the Pacific coast since leaving Stanford.

Rounding out the program were the Tennessee-Mississippi and Florida-Mississippi State clashes in the Southeastern conference, Maryland's meeting with its nearby rival, Western Maryland, the Rice-Southern Methodist tilt in the southwest and the Washington State-Gonzaga encounter in the far west.

The University of Miami added [illegible] to its season [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible] over one of the east's leaders, 10-6.

BIG SIX MEETING ON WITH FIRST BUSINESS

Settle Dates Spring Affairs and Prepare Discussion Cage Regulations.

KANSAS CITY. (AP). Athletic directors and faculty representatives of the Big Six and the Missouri Valley conferences met in all day sesions here Friday, and the net result aside from the transaction of routine business was decision on spring dates for conference events.

The faculty representatives of the two conferences will meet in a joint session Saturday morning, and at the same time the Big Six directors and basketball coaches will meet in closed session for interpretation of basketball rules. An open rules interpretation meeting is scheduled Saturday afternoon.

Big Six directors fixed the following dates for spring sports: Swimming meet March 5-6 at Iowa State; wrestling meet at Nebraska March 5-6; indoor track at Missouri March 6; outdoor track, tennis and golf at Lincoln May 21-22.

It also was announced the annual Drake Relays will be held at Des Moines April 23 and 24, and Dr. F. C. Allen announced the Kansas Relays would be held at Lawrence April 16 and 17, April 16 being devoted to interscholastic competition.

In recent years the Big Six swimming meet has been held at Kansas City, but the rules were changed making it necessary to hold the meets at one of the member schools. A rotating schedule was adopted. The directors turned down a recommendation of the tank tutors to increase squad membership from 9 to 12 men.

TINKER RALLIES BUT CONDITION CRITICAL

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP). Physicians said Joe Tinker, famous major league baseball player of former years, was somewhat improved Saturday but still "critically ill." They held little chance for his recovery.

A paralytic stroke laid low the "Tinker-s-to-Evers-to-chance" double play artist. Complications lessen the hope for his life.

Irish Will Be Seeking Its Third, Straight Triumph Over Coast Team.

LOS ANGELES. (AP). Notre Dame and the University of Southern California close their 1936 football campaigns here Saturday in their 11th annual intersectional battle.

Coach Elmer Layden's fighting Irish from South Bend, fresh from a spectacular victory over Northwestern, were favored to inflict another defeat in the Trojans' so-so season. Drizzly weather overnight threatened to hold attendance down to 55,000.

In the Irish-Trojan series, started in 1926 under the regime of the late Knute Rockne, Notre Dame has won six times, U. S. C. four. Notre Dame sought its third straight victory Saturday, something neither team has been able to accomplish.

©NANA THE LINCOLN JOURNAL AND OTHER NEWSPAPERS

LOS ANGELES.—Anyone who thinks the football season is all over and washed up should move along to California. Apparently, in this land of sun and orange blossoms, the campaign is only warming up.

Notre Dame meets Southern California in an old time rivalry Saturday, and, farther north, Pop Warner sends his Temple team against St. Mary's in San Francisco. A week later on, T. C. U. will see what Slinging Sam Baugh can do against an unbeaten untied Santa Clara outfit. And this leads on to the Rose Bowl, now a month away.

The meeting of Notre Dame and Southern California recalls many memories. It goes back to the first meetings of Knute Rockne and Howard Jones, two of the country's greatest. There was the time when Rock led his last team into action against Southern California. I was with Rock that Saturday night in Chicago after a tough Army game, played in sleet, snow, rain and mud, in which Marchy Schwartz ran to the winning touchdown, the margin being 7 to 6.

To my mind, that was Rockne's greatest team—that 1930 outfit. Before moving to California, he had lost Jumping Joe Savoldi and Moon Mullins from his backfield. And Savoldi was close to being the greatest fullback I ever saw. Rockne was on his way to meet a great Southern California team, including such stars as Pinckert and Ernie Smith. Minus Savoldi and Mullins, this Notre Dame team, using Bucky O'Connor as the undiscovered spearhead, beat U. S. C. 27 to 0.

Then there is Pop Warner, lugging his Temple team to meet St. Mary's at San Francisco. Pop and I got to talking over old days. The first time I ever saw Pop was back in 1896, when he brought his Georgia team up to play Vanderbilt in Nashville. That was only a mere matter of 40 years ago. After leaving Georgia, Pop came along to coach some of the greatest teams in football history. There was Carlisle, still the most colorful aggregation that ever played football anywhere or any time—Jim Thorpe, Bemus Pierce, Metoxen, Hidson, Mount Pleasant, Hauser, Calac, Guyon—on and on the day one of Pop's backs had the football planted under his jersey to run 90 yards for a touchdown—then a great Pittsburgh team, one of the best—then Stanford now Temple and now back again on the coast.

A great thing about Pop. He still looks about the same age—dating back 20 or 25 years. He has a philosophy we all need.

"I do the best I can," he said, "and let fate and nature take their courses. I quit worrying about things a long time ago. That's where age comes with worry. And most of it is useless and wasted."

BOXING ASSOCIATION SUSPENDS JOHN LEWIS

WASHINGTON (AP). The District of Columbia boxing commission, thru Secy. Harvey Miller, announced Saturday that John Henry Lewis, world's light heavyweight champion, had been suspended by commissions affiliated with the National Boxing association.

The suspension stands until Lewis has satisfied his obligation to Promoter McDonald of Washington. The N. B. A. charged Lewis failed to keep an agreement with McDonald.

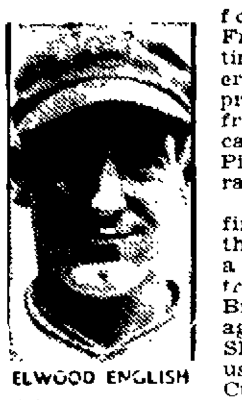
BURLEIGH STEPS OUT AS BIG LEAGUER AND GETS FOUR PLAYERS

Sends Frey to Cubs, Brandt to Bucs for Pitchers and Infielders.

LANDIS RIDER DEFEATED

By PAUL MICKELSON.

MONTREAL. (AP). Gruff, tough Burleigh Grimes, who did less talking than any manager lolling around the baseball bazaar this week, did some rapid fire pitching for Brooklyn Friday by getting four players for the price of two from the Chicago Cubs and Pittsburgh Pirates.



ELWOOD ENGLISH

Making his first venture in the market as a big league trader, the new Brooklyn manager swapped Shortstop Linus Frey to the Cubs for Infielder Elwood "Woody" English and Roy Henshaw, diminutive southpaw pitcher. A few minutes later, old Burleigh closed a deal whereby he traded southpaw Pitcher Ed Brandt to the Pirates for second baseman Harry "Cookie" Lavagetto and Ralph Birkofer, young southpaw.

Grimes' little trading spree saved the day's market from becoming one of the deadest in many years. Except for Burleigh's activities, the only piece of news to come from the meeting was a left handed slap at Commissioner Kenesaw M. Landis by the minors. They reversed their decision Thursday on his proposed rider on the Baltimore amendment and rejected it by unanimous vote.

At Thursday's meeting, the minors adopted the Baltimore amendment, permitting scouts and representatives of all ball clubs to recommend players to teams of lower classification without being denied the right later on to buy for themselves the player recommended. When the commissioner heard of the proposed amendment, he submitted his rider, which would require all recommendations to be filed in his office as well as those of the president of the league involved and the head of the minor league association. The minors voted for the rider, 17 to 4.

Friday, however, President Dal Hill of the Piedmont league resurrected the rider and led a movement which resulted in its unanimous defeat.

Want New Faces.

Brooklyn's deals, definitely one to give the daffiness boys of Flatbush new faces and greater defensive strength, solved one of Chicago's keenest problems—what to do with English.

The 29 year old Cub was rated one of the prize infielders in baseball over a period from 1929 and '32, but mystery surrounded him from then on as he was used largely for utility duty. The Cubs said English wasn't in the "dog house," but the fact remained he was used less and less. In 1935, he appeared in only 34 games; last season he was in and out of 64. English was with the Cubs 10 seasons and was a field captain.

Henshaw, who won six and lost five last season, is 25. He came to the Cubs in 1933 from the University of Chicago and then was sent to Los Angeles where he gained another chance in big time by winning 16 and losing 4. In '35, the tantalizing little southpaw won 13 and lost five for the Cubs, but last season won 6 and dropped five. Manager Charlie Grimm was dissatisfied with Henshaw for several reasons and intimated he would trade him as early as last summer.

The Boston Bees put another DiMaggio in the big leagues, buying Vincent DiMaggio, older brother of the Yankee Joe, from San Diego for cash, outfielder Rupert Thompson and pitcher Jim Chaplin.

The Bees also traded utility infielder Mickey Haslin to the New York Giants for third baseman Eddie Mayo, who wasn't given much employment by the Giants.

NEW YORK. (AP). Stocks grasped at rallying straws in Saturday's market and an assortment of specialties managed to work ahead for gains of fractions to a point or more.

Many of the leaders, including the steels, motors, rails and utilities, churned indefinitely and light selling cut down a few issues here and there. Transfers were around 950,000 shares. Business news was again a supporting influence and nervousness over foreign happenings seemed to have wanted appreciably.

Oils, aircrafts and rail equipments were in the popular column during the greater part of the two-hour proceedings, altho some of these gave ground later.

Conspicuous gainers included Newport Industries, Texas Gulf Producing, Poor & Co., American Locomotive, Baldwin, Houston Oil, Standard Oil of N. J., Pure Oil, Douglas Aircraft, United Aircraft, U. S. Industrial Alcohol, American Commercial Alcohol, and International Hydro-Electric.

In a comparatively restricted groove were U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, General Motors, Chrysler, Montgomery Ward, Sears Roebuck, Western Union, Consolidated Edison, North American, Goodyear, N. Y. Central, Pennsylvania, Public Service of N. J., and American Water Works.

A downward drift was exhibited by American Telephone, Anaconda, Kennecott, McIntyre Porcupine, Dome, Standard Oil of Indiana, Woolworth and Gulf States steel.

The outward tide in stock exchange seats was stemmed with the sale of a membership for $97,000, up $8,000 from the previous transaction, which was at the year's low.

Ending of the Midland Steel strike, which had been embarrassing to some of the large automobile companies because of suspension in parts shipments, brought hopes in financial circles that peaceful solutions will appear for other threatening labor problems.

Drafts of further regulations of stock trading were expected from the securities and exchange commission next week. Pending study of the new rules, speculative forces were said to be stepping carefully on both sides of the market.

Communications company issues were not particularly responsive to predictions that this year's net gain in Bell System stations should exceed 850,000.

Stocks of the Van Sweringen system apparently were unaffected by the announcement Herbert Fitzpatrick, close associate of the Cleveland brothers, had been selected to carry on the "empire." Most of the shares held to a restricted area.

Those who have been trailing with the utilities and equipments noted estimates that the principal power companies this year will have spent some $275,000,000 on expansion compared with an outlay of $193,000,000 in 1935.

The boost in crude oil prices was expected to greatly improve earnings of numerous small concerns in this field which have been working to narrow profit margins. Due to heavy consumption, there was said to be little fear of over production at this time.

Interest was shown in the report of the association of American railroads indicating the carriers in the first ten months had an annual rate of return of 2.36 percent on property investment.

Sterling was off ⅛ of a cent at $4.89⅞, in initial foreign exchange transactions, and the French franc was .00⅜ of a cent lower at 4.65¾ cents.

GRAIN NOTES.

CHICAGO. (AP). Modern Miller said: "Snow and rain fell in parts of the dry area and will check dust storms. With more snow, conditions will be benefited in districts threatened by soil erosion. Cold weather has checked growth to a considerable extent. Western Oklahoma, Kansas and Nebraska go into the winter in a generally dry condition. The same condition prevails over a large part of the American and Canadian northwest."

R. I. Mansfield of Bartlett-Frazier company said "Looks like there has been cash wheat worked to come here. Cash interests are sellers of December wheat and some May wheat."

J. S. Bache & Co., was advised by telegram from Kansas City that a slow rain fell at Liberal, Kas., and a light snow in parts of Nebraska and western Kansas.

Favorable rains which will aid in the germination of newly seeded wheat were reported in northern India.

WHEAT FUTURE PRICES EASE OFF MODERATELY

Light Precipitation Over a Wide Area Causes Selling.

CHICAGO. (AP). Widespread but light precipitation over United States spring and winter crop belts led to mostly lower prices for wheat in Chicago.

The Liverpool wheat market steadied during late dealings, and cables said there was continued active demand for Argentine and Australian wheat both for Italy and Great Britain. Disappearance of wheat in the United States was officially reported as 15 percent larger than a year ago.

Wheat closed easy, at the same as Friday's finish to ⅝ lower, Dec. 124¾@⅞, May 120¾@⅞, corn ⅜ off to ¾ up, Dec. 107⅜@½, May new 103¼@⅜, oats at ⅛ decline to an equal gain, and provisions varying from 15 cents setback to 5 cents advance.

July wheat, representing the 1937 domestic crop, displayed more of a downward tendency than did old crop months, December and May. A steadying factor on the market as a whole was attention given to the circumstance that Liverpool July at $1.19⅜ was more than 12 cents over Chicago and 16¾ cents over Kansas City. One leading trade authority said that considering the quality of American hard winter wheat, this price difference should mean a full export basis.

The United States, it was pointed out, has not heretofore been anywhere near such a basis since 1929, when the farm board at Washington inaugurated official stels toward attempted control of grain prices. Assertions were added that the present price situation held more promise for American agriculture than do political measures.

Overnight export purchases of Canadian wheat were estimated as about 500,000 bushels, including 300,000 bushels to Italy. Corn, oats and rye eased with wheat. Chicago receipts of corn Saturday totaled 197 cars. Provisions were without significant change.

LIVESTOCK

CHICAGO. (AP). Hogs developed a downward tendency in Saturday's quiet livestock trade. The market was called steady to weak.

A few good to choice butchers sold at $9.25@9.85 and some sorted swine scaling around 250 lbs. brought $10. Quotable top was $10.05.

There was an increase in the volume of receipts of all livestock this week compared with the previous week largely because the latter period contained a holiday. Nevertheless, prices stiffened in all departments except fat lambs.

Traders said the principal strengthening factors in livestock included the termination of the period of increased poultry competition and reports of good demand for meat at retail counters. There were also trade reports tha some packing interests were storing pork heavily. Wholesale meat prices were about steady to strong altho $10.25 per hundred weight on Thursday. This was the highest in almost two months.

Medium weight and weighty steers gained 50c and some sales were $1 higher than a week ago. Yearlings and better grade light steers advanced 25c. However, common and medium grades were slightly lower in instances. The sharp advance of heavier steers placed these on a price parity with yearlings for the first time in months. Steers scaling 1,280 lbs. reached the week's top of $12.50 along with yearlings. Fat lambs lost 50@75c. The closing top was $8.90.

December, 12.21; January, 12.04; March, 12.03; May, 11.89; July, 11.73; October, 11.21. Southern selling and offerings from New Orleans and Liverpool supplied the demand which came principally from trade sources. There was further December liquidation and next October was under pressure owing to uncertainties over crop control for 1937. After March had eased from 12.03 to 11.88 it recovered to 12.00 on a little trade and commission house buying. Prices generally were 1 to 5 points net lower at the end of the first hour. An international house reduced its estimate of the East Indian crop by 324,000 bales from an earlier figure to 5,697,000 bales compared with last year's production of 6,566,000. Liverpool reported a narrow market with light trade calling balancing hedge selling.

Despite some lessening of the unemployment problem in this country since the peak of 1933, there are still five times as many unemployed as there were in 1929. Figures on unemployment over the rest of the industrial world indicate that present unemployment is nearly back to the 1929 level.

NEW YORK. (AP). A further sharp advance in a few utility issues was the principal development in Saturday's bond market.

Fresh interest centered on International Hydro Electric 6s, which scored wide gains in the last few sessions. In a rapid movement Saturday the price was lofted about 5 points to a new high for the year. American & Foreign Power 5s were bid up about 1¾.

Trading was light in many of the recently active industrial convertibles and other trading favorites. The price movement was uneven, with several low priced rails coming close to the best levels of the week.

The improvement touched Alleghany Corp. 5s, Baltimore & Ohio 4½s, St. Paul 5s, and Great Northern 4s. Fractionally lower were Anaconda Copper 4½s, Rock Island General 4s, Walworth 4s and Youngstown Sheet & Tube 3½s.

U. S. governments ruled a little under the previous closings. In the foreign section, modest improvement was shown by bonds of Belgium, Canada and Columbia. German, some of the Japanese and Polish issues gave up fractions to 1½ point.

Press, Citizens and Legionnaires at Banquet.

BROKEN BOW, Neb.—One hundred and fifty guests attended a banquet held here Friday evening in honor of the 50th anniversary of E. R. Purcell as newspaper editor and publisher.

The banquet was a surprise to Mr. Purcell. All his 50 years as a newspaper editor have been in Custer county, and the special edition gave a history of the progress of his paper and told of his own early history.

The banquet was under the auspices of the Broken Bow public service club, with Miles N. Lee as chairman of the program. Frank Kelly was toastmaster, and talks were made by C. H. Holcomb, Broken Bow, who told of happenings of 50 years ago; W. H. Plourd, Fullerton, state president of the Nebraska Press association, on "Going to Press"; E. P. Walter, Broken Bow, "Today and Yesterday" Will M. Maupin, Lincoln, "Nuts and Quads" and E. R. Purcell, "In Self Defense." A. B. Wood, Gering, a past president of the Nebraska State Press association also spoke. George Snow, Chadron and Lyman Cass, Ravenna, past presidents of the State Press association, attended the banquet, along with many newspaper men of central Nebraska.

Resolutions praising the work of Mr. Purcell as an editor and publisher were presented by Joseph E. Palmer post of the American Legion and adopted, and a huge banquet was presented the guest of honor by Commander Evans, of Joseph E. Palmer post.

YOUR PROBLEMS

By Mary Gordon

Dear Mary Gordon: What say we go out and drown ourselves, girls? I'm really broken-hearted after reading Stung's letter, because, from what I gathered, he doesn't care whether we live or die. Personally, I'd rather live if it wouldn't interfere too much with his future.

Stung, I hate to see a fellow with the ability you possess for literally expressing your ideas, turn into a dried pessimistic nobody.

What's the matter. Did your girl friend stand you up? She must have been very hard-hearted to throw you overboard. But, who knows, maybe she has found someone who is a little more congenial than you. I don't understand how it could be, but miracles do happen, you know.

I understand how you feel about girls, Stung, if you have had the experience I previously referred to. But gee, don't condemn all of us. After all, you of the "stronger sex" have a few drawbacks that we don't approve of in the least. In fact, to such an extent that sometimes we feel as tho the birth of some fellows was a mistake.

My advice to you would be to get out and see how really fine and noble some girls are. There are still a few of us left who have a love and respect for the finer things in life. Believe it or not!

Terry has the right idea. I agree with her.

So, here's mud in your eye, Stung, and until you change your attitude don't call on us to get it out, because we might "sting" you for saying all those naw-ty things about us. Then you would be "Twice Stung."—Margie.

A. Does Stung feel better or worse after his outburst and those he inspired?

Dear Mary Gordon: Sorry Six Foot Two to have only gotten your letter just before starting out for the west coast as it left no time for neither hunting nor fishing. However let's not give up yet for I shall be all the more anxious to hear from you having left the old home place I have always lived on and friends I have known since childhood.

I might add that I too grew up on a farm. As for your letters I really more than appreciate them. I only hope I will not always be so long in answering them. That just reminds me that due to the great increase of correspondence, I will need a secretary at once. Perhaps you might ask Mary to forward the reply. I'm sure it would be a great help. At least this part of the correspondence would not be quite so complicated. After all it really isn't so easy to know just exactly what you mean when you want to get it across without the readers knowing too.

I found it hard leaving my home church and Christians I have fellowshipped with but am glad to have found others. Glad too that no matter where we go Jesus is always there to comfort and cheer and always ready to help us if we call on him. I am glad that Jesus is a friend of mine. Only by His grace and great love am I able to overcome the temptations of sin. I find it not so easy to profess a real Christian life and harder still to live up to the profession. I must close for this time hoping to hear from you soon. Anne.

A. Tho your letter is postmarked from a point far distant from Nebraska, distance never yet separated two determined friends.

Each slice may be wrapped in heavy waxed paper to store.

MASONS ELECT J. J. WILSON

John J. Wilson was named worshipful master of Lancaster lodge No. 54, A. F. & A. M., Friday night at the temple, 1635 L. Merle M. Hale is the new senior warden; Calvin B. Hall, junior warden; William L. Weigel, treasurer; Victor Seymour, secretary, Max Meyer, trustee, and Harley V. Styer, member of the board of relief. Mr. Styer, the outgoing worshipful master, was in charge of the meeting.

CULBERTSON ON CONTRACT

MADE TO ORDER.

The hand shown today is, I strongly suspect, a figment of some bridge wag's imagination. It was sent to me anonymously with the simple question: "How many tricks should West defeat a three no trump contract played by South if he leads his four kings in order of rank and is allowed to win with each?"

My unknown correspondent did not suggest how the North-South hands might arrive at such a remarkable contract and, considering that neither has even an opening bid, I must confess that I am unable to supply the bidding. So I shall confine myself strictly to the question. The answer is that, after West cashes his four kings, he cannot defeat the contract at all. It is quite a remarkable hand.

South, dealer.

Neither side vulnerable.

After taking the four kings, as mentioned, West must play into one of the combined North-South tenaces. It does not matter which he selects. Let us suppose that it is a spade. The queen is taken in dummy and a spade returned to South's jack. South now cashes his diamond ace. This is a vital play. He then leads the jack of hearts and, whether or not West covers, the ten dropping from East's hand promotes four heart tricks in the dummy.

The last three cards in dummy will be one heart and the two minor suit nine spots. Declarer keeps the ace-jack of clubs and the jack of diamonds. West, at this stage, has the queen-ten of clubs and the queen of diamonds. On the last heart South discards his diamond jack and West cannot discard anything without scuttling the ship. A diamond discard establishes dummy's nine spot, and a club discard allows South to win both the ace and jack.

I strongly suspect that whoever sent me the hand was trying to pull my leg, but, far from resenting this, I feel only gratitude for an interesting although obviously homemade hand.

Incidentally, in self-protection if for no other reason, I had better point out that the contract can be defeated if West, instead of running down the line of his kings, sticks to spade leads. South never can bring off the Vienna coup unless West helps him.

TODAY'S QUESTION.

Question: With neither side vulnerable, the bidding has been as follows:

South	West	North	East
1 heart	Pass	2 hearts	?

East held the following:

♠A 7 ♥9 6 4 ♦A K 8 5 ♣Q 6 3 2

Should he have made a bid?

Answer: East should have passed. There are three plus honor tricks in the hand, but not enough winners for a takeout double or an overcall at the level of three.

FINED FOR ASSAULT.

Roy Maddux was found guilty in municipal court Friday of assault and battery upon Emery Bishop, and was fined $50 and costs. The original charge of assault with intent to do great bodily harm was dropped.

HULL SUMMONS ALL AMERICANS TO CO-OPERATION

by the rules of peace, and forthwith perfect the machinery for its maintenance.

"Should we fail to make this outstanding contribution, it would be a practical desertion of the cause of peace, and a tragic blow to the hopes of humanity."

Hull offered the following principles as guides for the conference's labors, with the assertion that "what we do contemplates no conflict with sincere peace efforts the world over."

Some Guiding Principles.

1. Adoption of broad, vigorous educational programs by each nation to organize public opinion against war, concurrently with the maintenance of national policies best calculated to preserve peace.

2. Frequent conference between representatives of the nations and intercourse between their peoples as "indispensable" in their influence for peace and well-being, understanding, friendship and trust.

3. Completion of ratification by all the American nations of the five peace agreements already in existence.

4. Pursuit of a common neutrality policy by all the American nations in time of conflict abroad on the principle that "neutrality is an achievement to be attained more readily if undertaken jointly."

5. Adoption of an America-wide policy of commercial liberality, involving lowering of excessive trade barriers and removal of injurious international trade discriminations.

6. Recognition of the necessity of "practical international co-operation" to restore many indispensable relationships between nations "now at a low ebb" thru disregard of "the rights, privileges and opinions of others."

7. Revitalization and strengthening of international law founded upon the principles of justice and humanity.

8. Observance of understandings, agreements and treaties between nations as constituting the "foundation of international order."

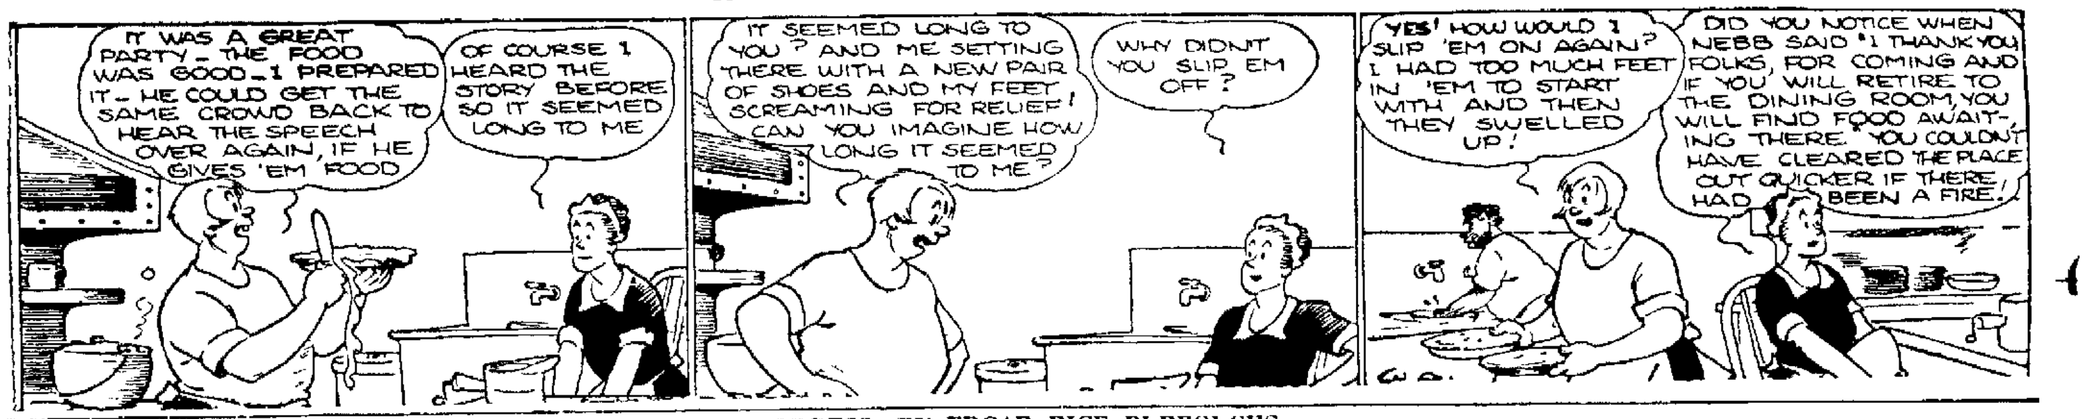
THE NEBBS—The Aftermath—BY SOL HESS.



IT WAS A GREAT PARTY - THE FOOD WAS GOOD - I PREPARED IT - HE COULD GET THE SAME CROWD BACK TO HEAR THE SPEECH OVER AGAIN, IF HE GIVES 'EM FOOD

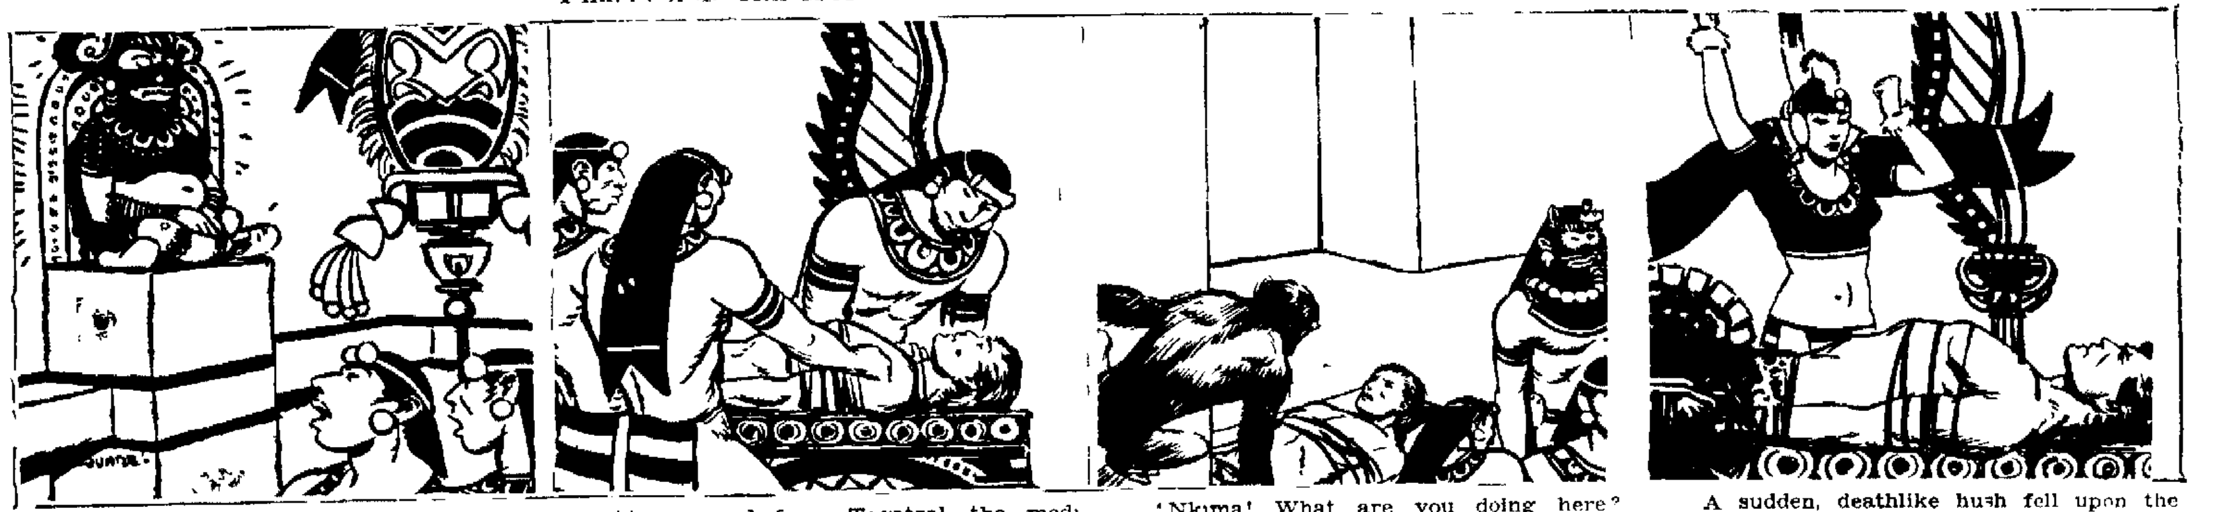
DID YOU NOTICE WHEN NEBB SAID "I THANK YOU FOLKS, FOR COMING AND IF YOU WILL RETIRE TO THE DINING ROOM, YOU WILL FIND FOOD AWAITING THERE." YOU COULDN'T HAVE CLEARED THE PLACE OUT QUICKER IF THERE HAD BEEN A FIRE!

TARZAN AND THE MAYAN GODDESS—BY EDGAR RICE BURROUGHS.



The monsters turned their eyes to the gem spangled green goddess Their chant of death, punctuated by the eerie boom of gongs, rose to a wild shriek Zalya our queen brings a sacrifice, O goddess May the life blood of the captive be pleasing in thy holy sight"

At a signal from Togatzal, the medicine priest a score of clammy hands seized Tarzan flung him to the altar and strapped him tightly Then an excited little monkey swung thru the doorway and beheld the terrifying spectacle. 'Tarzan' Tarzan'' he cried

'Nkima' What are you doing here? the ape-man exclaimed "Go back to the jungle As my friend some of the 'manus will take you into their tribe and you may live long and happily among them Go quickly Tarzan is about to die It will not be a pleasant sight '

A sudden, deathlike hush fell upon the assembly of monsters to be broken by an hysterical laugh which burst from the lips of their queen Simultaneously, Zalya's sacrificial dagger flashed upward, then plunged swiftly down again toward the heart of Tarzan!
